INTRODUCTION

The Vedas, meaning the repository of knowledge, form the fundamentals of Vedic religion and Āryan society. The available earliest literature of India has unanimously accepted the four Vedas as revealed to the seers (ऋषि) or ṛishis at the time of the creation of the universe. The great sanctity attached to the Vedas and to the seers enhanced the inter-related importance of both and a ṛishi signifies a Veda, as well. (See p. 7, Vol. II, Vedic Vāṅmaya kā Itihāsa). An unbiassed and careful introspection of this vast literature leads no doubt to the important conclusion that the revelation of the hymns to the seers had never been questioned. The eighteenth and nineteenth centuries ushered in an era of criticism adversely affecting the fundamentals and pertinently putting forth the sarcastic proposition that the hymns are the songs of cow-herds. The studies initiated in the field during these centuries by the Western scholars had expressed divergent views on the subject. The earlier group who had reverence for this sacred literature, was closely followed by a motivated section bent upon denouncing fully their predecessors who had to face vehement opposition. Their view point, that Sanskrit was the source of Greek, Latin, Anglo-Saxon, Slavonic, and also of other European languages etc. which helped to bring the truth to the fore, was repeatedly assailed and shelved by the prejudiced writings of the later group of scholars.

The scholars from the West had attempted writing history of Vedic literature. In the field were Maxmuller, Macdonell, Weber and Winterntz, etc., who treated the intricate subject according to their own interpretations putting forth the material in a brief, concise and summary form. Their writings do not probe into the details or dilate upon the intricacies. The desideratum was A Comprehensive History of Vedic Literature.

The earliest Indian pioneer who attempted a subjective analysis and who had the necessary titanic vision was the late Pandit Bhagavad Datta, a close and ardent student of the Vedas, the Brāhmaṇas, the Āraṇyakas, the Upanishads, the Kalpa Sūtras and the vast Vedic as well as classical Sanskrit literature, a very large number of manuscripts of which he had personally collected from remote corners of this vast country and deposited for a critical study in the then Lal Chand Library of D. A. V. College, Lahore, of which he was the Research Superintendent upto 1934 and this collection after the great historical event of the Partition of our Country, is now safely deposited in the Viśveśvarānanda Vedic Research Institute, Hoshiarpur; while a sizable porion of it remained in the University Library of the Panjab University at Lahore, now in Pakistan. He had written three volumes in Hindi on the Brāhmaṇa and Āraṇyaka Works (1927), the Commentators of the Vedas (1931), and the Recensions of the Vedas (1935). The volume on Brāhmaṇa and Āraṇyaka Works was based on his introduction to the Vedic Kośa (1922) by Hans Raj, his devoted Librarian. The treatment of the subject, his approach to the general problem and the details available with him were in simple and forceful language put forth for a careful study by the student as well as the scholar. These three volumes eventually formed the basis for subsequent writings on the subject both by Indian as well as Western scholars, who unequivocally admired his depth, comprehension and clarity of expression on the subject.

These three volumes in Hindi, required a careful editing and addition of the latest research material. Their editing was undertaken by the present writer in the year 1973. The three volumes in Hindi on Brāhmaṇa and Āraṇyaka Works (1974), the Commentators of the Vedas (1976) and the Vedas, their Saṁhitās and Recensions (1977) have been published. The volumes on the Upanishads and the Kalpa-Sūtras are under preparation and are likely to be published, shortly.

The long cherished desire of the scholars, especially from foreign countries to have a simple, clear, analytical and comprehensive understanding of the subject matter, had led the present writer to bring forth, 'A Comprehensive History of Vedic Literature' in English in five volumes. The material critically put forth, herein, basically shatters the persistent views impregnated into and expressed by the Western and most of the Indian scholars. The fundamental difference between the Western thought and that expressed in these volumes centres round :

- A. Were the hymns of the Vedas revealed ?
- B. Interpretation of the hymns.
- C. Do the Vedas have history ?
- D. Are the brāhmaṇas also the Vedas ?
- E. Is animal sacrifice in yajñas prescribed in the Vedas ?

A. Throughout the vast Sanskrit literature, it is maintained that speech (वाक् or logos) neither has a beginning nor an end. It is akshara (अक्षर). It is eternal and is grasped at the beginning of each creation. This speech is known as div or daivi. It differs from the speech used by human beings. In the Kāṭhaka and Maitrāyaṇī Saṁhitās, the Nirukta, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and throughout the Vedic literature, this distinction in speech is clearly discernible. The hymns were revealed in the daivi speech. At the time of creation the great Seers were receptive to the chhāndasī prakriyā or metrical movements through the highly energised particles of electricity in the heaven, the middle region and on the earth and could, therefore, transmit the hymns so available to them. To add, each human brain, also, has electricity.

The hymns, epissima verbis, have been handed over to posterity undisturbed during the past thousands of years. The arrangement of padas has neither been changed nor replaced by synonyms. Their sanctity has never been disturbed. For example, in the very first hymn of the R̥gveda, the pada, agnīmīle is nowhere found to be substituted by vanhimīle, a synonym for agni. Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, writes to suggest that even if an attempt is made to compose hymns their metrical formation would betray the fact and any such interpolation could be easily detected. The formation of hymns is not regulated by rules of grammar applicable to the spoken language of the people. This had baffled the Western scholars who formed incoherent opinions and a glaring example of such an expression is by Macdonell, who writes : 'Since metrical considerations largely interfere with the ordinary position of words in the Saṁhitās, the normal order is best represented by the prose of the Brāhmaṇas, and as it there appears is, moreover, doubtless the original one.' (pp. 283-284)

Had these scholars correctly grasped the difference between a hymn and its explanation in a brāhmaṇa, preposterous theories and inconsistent dicta could well have been eliminated. Brāhmaṇas being an explanation of hymns were in the spoken language of the people even though their authors could possibly have been the same ṛishis, who were also the seers of the hymns. The hymns are not abnormal, as Macdonell had thought and expressed.

B. Interpretation of the hymns had been confined only to their ritualistic significance by the writers of the mediaeval periods, whose works were easily accessible to the Western scholars. It was expressed that the hymns are confined to the ritualistic yajñas only as : Vedā yajñārtham pravṛittāḥ. (वेदा यज्ञार्थं प्रवृत्ताः).

Sāyaṇa expressed the same idea in his preface to his commentary on Kāṇva-Saṁhitā. The translations of the Vedas as well as writings on the vast Vedic Literature by these scholars have, therefore, to be treated as one sided and incomplete. On the other hand, the interpretation of a hymn is to accord to its, devatā, metre etc. In the Vedic literature, three fold meaning of a hymn is prescribed by Durgāchārya in his vṛitti on the Nirukta :

Adhyātmādhidēvatādhīyajñābhīdhāyinām mantrāṇāmarthā vijñāyante.
(अध्यात्माधिदेवताधि यज्ञाभिधायिनां मन्त्राणामर्था विज्ञायन्ते, Nirukta, 1. 18).

(xiv)

Many more writers have written in the same strain. The interpretation of a hymn accordingly has to be :

1. ādhibhautika, i. e., pertaining to creative beings, derived from primary elements, etc;
2. ādhidaivika, i. e., relating to the Cosmos and cosmogony, the influence of the atmosphere or planets and creation of the universe, etc.;
3. ādhyātmika i. e., relating to the philosophy of man, his life, his soul, the Creator etc.; and
4. yājñika i. e., relating to the ritualistic sacrifices.

Writers in the past had followed the ancient dictum to interpret a hymn. A glaring example is of the word Vishṇu in idamvishṇurvichakrame (RV 1.22.17). Bhartṛihari in his commentary on Mahābhāṣya explains it as :

Yathā idam vishṇurvichakrame (RV 1.22.17)—ityatram eka eva vishṇusha-bdoanekaśaktih sannadhidaivatamadhyātmadhiyajñyam cha ātmani nārāyaṇe chashāle cha tayā śaktyā pravartate. (यथा इदं विष्णुर्विचक्रमे-इत्यत्र एक एव विष्णु- शब्दो ज्ञेयः सन्निधैवतमध्यात्मधियज्ञं च आत्मनि नारायणं चषाले च तया शक्त्या प्रवर्तते।)

The word Vishṇu in its ādhidaivika form means of immense prowess as of Sun; in its philosophical form as the Creator and in its ritualistic form as chashāla or the lid of a yūpa.

Similar has to be the interpretation of other padas. To understand and interpret the hymns, therefore, it is necessary to have a thorough knowledge of the vast Vedic literature, and to have a deep study of the brāhmaṇas, as well as the Nirukta, and all the available lexicons.

C. The hymns do not refer to history or historical events. They being eternal, had to have been revealed prior to any historical event. "The classical Sanskrit literature abounds with inter-polations. Could not the vast Vedic literature be a plaything of the writers of yore who out of vanity must have experienced elation to inter-polate hymns, as well ? A careful screening of the Vedas and the Saṃhitās is necessary to eliminate such sacrilege?"

It is stated that the hymns also have itihāsa. In the Nirukta it is mentioned : tatretihāsamāchakshate (2.10) and ityaitihāsikah (2.16). These references are to eternal history in general, and not to any particular event of history. Jaimini has stated : param tu śrūtisāmānyamātram (1.31) i. e., all the names in the hymns are in general and do not refer to any particular event or person. In the brāhmaṇas to explain the substance of a hymn, historical events or gāthās are mentioned as an illustration. Mention of such words as sarasvatī, gaṅgā, yamunā, etc., in the hymns, does not at all refer to their namesakes on the earth. Sarasvatī, for example, is a stream of cosmic consciousness as referred to in the hymns and the terrestrial river is merely a namesake of its cosmic original. The cosmic significance of the vedic words and the cosmic sense of the seers needs greater understanding to interpret the hymns. A careful study as suggested in the preceding paras shall shatter the unconvincing view that the Vedas also refer to historical events. A lot can be written on this theme and shall be discussed in its proper place in the Volume on 'the Vedas, their Saṁhitās and Recensions.' A reference, however, may be made to the chapter on, "Are Brāhmaṇas the Vedas."

D. The brāhmaṇas being an explanation of the hymns, are not the Vedas. These were only propounded by the ṛishis but were not revealed to them. In the mediaeval periods some writers initiated the theory that the brāhmaṇas are also the Vedas. Śabara, Piṭṛibhūti, Śaṁkara, Kumārila, Bhavasvāmī, Devasvāmī, Viśvarūpa Medhātithi, Karka, Dhūrtasvāmī, Devatrāta, Vāchaspati Mīśra, Rājaśekhara, Rāmānuja, Uvaṭa, Maskarī, Sāyaṇa and many more writers have considered both the hymns of the four Vedas and their explanations in the brāhmaṇas, as the Veda, itself. In the past not a single āchārya had expressed any doubt that the brāhmaṇas are not the Vedas. The brāhmaṇas have been throughout respected as the Veda itself. The rituals have been performed considering the brāhmaṇas as equal to the Vedas. Still many āchāryas could not conform to this view and they continued to treat the brāhmaṇas as separate from the Vedas. The controversy has been discussed in detail in Chapter VII (pp. 123-150) concluding that the brāhmaṇas were propounded in the language other than that of the hymns; these were compiled during the Mahābhārata period and had assumed importance when ritualistic significance of the hymns gained predominance over other meanings; but should be understood in their true context as an explanation of the Vedas and not the Veda itself.

E. Another controversy relates to whether animal sacrifice in yajñas is prescribed in the hymns or not. It is not prescribed in the hymns. The hymns having only ritualistic significance, do not permit any animal sacrifice. The word paśu means agni, vāyu, sūrya, prithivī etc. Interpreted according to its reference to the context, it nowhere implies a quadruped. It is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : Agnih paśurāsīt, tenāyajanta. Vāyuh paśurāsīt tenāyajanta. Sūryah paśurāsīt tenāyajanta (13.2.7.13, 14, 15). In the same brāhmaṇa, it is emphatically stated that agni is sacrifice personified and use of vegetation alone is proper for performing a sacrifice. (See p. 245).

The Western writers had confined the vast Vedic literature to mantra-period, brāhmaṇa-period, sūtra-period etc., of water tight compartments presuming that a ban was imposed on those human beings not to exercise their brain at a specific period in any other direction. While the explanations of the hymns were propounded in the brāhmaṇas, the āraṇyakas, the upanishads and the sūtra literature etc., simultaneously, had started taking a form. As referred to in Chapter VI, a vast literature had existed on various subjects. The existence of this literature and the normal principle that human brain is beyond fetters is sufficient to refute the strange theories propounded. In fact, the brāhmaṇas, the āraṇyakas, the upanishads the sūtras and a host of literature on all possible types of subjects was available to the people of by-gone ages and never had there existed water tight compartments imposing checks on human brain.

A few decades earlier, very few brāhmaṇas had been known. The now available eighteen brāhmaṇas have been systematically described in Chapter II. A large number of these have been lost. References alone are available in literature to thirty-four lost brāhmaṇas which have been collected in chapter III. It is possible to trace out more references to them. An extensive research will help collate such references. Young scholars would be welcome to work in this field and contribute to enrich our culture.

A brief reference to the available Āraṇyakas, their commentators, their compilation and their help in understanding the meaning of the Vedas is given in the last thirty-eight pages.

My grateful thanks to all the authors from whom I have liberally drawn, my apologies for any mistakes and my request to communicate suggestions.

A small glossary has been added to help the readers to understand easily the meaning of most of the Sanskrit words. Transliteration from Devanāgarī into Roman accords to the table given on page 336. Due to non availability of certain printing types, transliteration of some of the letters has been expressed differently from the normal accepted form.

Printing of such a work in Delhi was a great hazard, but could be made smooth with the help of Shri Chandra Mohan Shastri, Proprietor of the Press, Shri Mishri Lal, his Foreman and Shri Vira Singh, the Machineman.

I invoke the blessings of the great Seers to impart and infuse into me comprehension of their infinite knowledge to further complete the remaining four volumes of this History of Vedic Literature which will help a lay man as well as a scholar to enjoy new vistas of culture presented, herein.

CHAPTER ONE

WHAT ARE THE BRĀHMAṆAS

1. Brāhmaṇa—its meaning

Vedic literature, the classical Sanskrit literature and various commentaries have mentioned the word brāhmaṇa. Their authors, annotators and commentators, however, have not offered any definition of this word. Sāyaṇa and other commentators are brief in defining it. Sāyaṇa in his commentary on Ṛigveda expresses : which in tradition is not a hymn or a mantra is a brāhmaṇa and which is not brāhmaṇa is a mantra.¹ A grammatical analysis of the word brāhmaṇa explains it as : *brahma vai mantrah*² i.e., a brahma is a hymn and the Veda is brahma or vedo brahma.³

Svāmī Dayānand Sarasvati in Anubhramochchhedana, revised by him, writes : These Aitareya and other works are brahma and are an explanation of the Vedas as : Brahmaṇām Vedānāmimāni vyākhyānāni brāhmaṇāni.⁴

4 ब्रह्मणां वेदानामिमानि व्याख्यातानि ब्राह्मणानि, p.6, Benaras, Sam 1937

A similar opinion he expresses in his Satyārtha Prakāśa : These are named brāhmaṇas or brahma as these are explanations to the Vedas.¹

Kapardi in his commentary on Āpastamba-Paribhāṣhā-Sūtra writes : Mantro-mananāt brāhmaṇamabhidhānāt,² i.e., the name mantra is derived from thoughtful deliberation and brāhmaṇa from appellation.

Skanda Svāmī also writes : Tathā amīmadanta pitaro yathā bhāgamāvṛishāyishat. Ityasya yathā bhāgamāśishurityevaitadāheti śatapathabrāhmaṇe vivaraṇāt.³ He again writes : Śatapathe yadvai tu śreshṭhastena vasishṭhah iti vasishṭhaśabdasya śreshṭhaśabden-ārthavivaraṇadarśanāt.⁴

2. Brāhmaṇa—means a book

The word brāhmaṇa as related to a book has only been used in the neuter gender and is not found in the Vedas or the saṁhitās. The brāhmaṇas had been propounded after the revelation of the hymns. The word brāhmaṇa meaning an explanation of the hymns, as such, need not be found in the hymns or the saṁhitās. This word is extensively used in the Taittirīya Saṁhitā as :

- (1) Suvargam lokam na prajānanti tebhya idam brāhmaṇam brūhi.⁵
- (2) So abrabhidbrāhmaṇam.⁶

3

Some of the brāhmaṇas express it as :

- (1) Yad vākovākyaṃ brāhmaṇam tadevaitenāpnuvanti tadavarundhate;¹
- (2) Trīṇi yajñe andhāmsīti ha sma pūrve brāhmaṇā mīmāsānte.....²

Similarly, Pāṇini mentions in an aphorism : Chhando brāhmaṇāni cha tadvishayāni.³

In the Nirukta it is stated : pañchartavah saṃvatsarasasyeti cha brāhmaṇam.⁴

In literature, the word brāhmaṇa, as such, is expressed in neuter gender. Amara and most of the other lexicographers do not explain this word. In the Medinīkoṣha, however, this word is referred to as :

Brāhmaṇam brahmasaṃghāte vedabhāge napuṃsakam

i.e., the word brāhmaṇa as collection of the brahma portion of the Veda is used in the neuter gender. The mediaeval authors had accepted brāhmaṇas as a part of the Veda itself.

In the Vāyu Purāṇa this word has been used as : mantrō mantrayaterdhātorbrāhmaṇe brahmaṇoṇanāt.⁶ Here the word ṇanāt signifies narration. This meaning of ṇana appears to be from a pre-Pāṇinian derivation.

(b) Chapter 34, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa

The word vāṅmaya has been used in Sanskrit literature as a collection of śāstras : Jagurgrihebhastyasta samasta vāṅmayai.¹

The word vāk means a hymn, truth, veda or sacrifice.² According to the Baudhāyana Dharma Sūtra it refers to a brāhmaṇa work as : Vāgiti brāhmaṇamuchyate.³ Vishṇu Dharmottara-purāṇa has a different expression in the following verse :

mantrāḥ sabrāhmaṇāḥ proktāstadartham brāhmaṇam smṛitam, Kalpanā cha tathā kalpāḥ kalpaścha brāhmaṇastathā.⁴

i.e., along with the hymns, the brāhmaṇas were also expounded. As explanation of the hymns, these are known as brāhmaṇas. Their formation and practice (as well as brāhmaṇa and practice) dilate upon the apportionment of a hymn.

The word brāhmaṇa at the end of the verse has a doubtful meaning. In genetic form its meaning does not fit here. Has this word been used here in masculine gender ? The reading may be corrupt. It could be possible that it has some other meaning. A verse of the Mahābhārata expresses this word in the masculine gender as :

Ya ime brāhmaṇāḥ proktā mantrā vai prokṣaṇe gavām, ete pramāṇam bhavat utāho neti vāsava.⁵

i.e., these brāhmaṇas and hymns which are read in the Gomedha, O Vāsava should be taken as authentic or not ?

In the Southern recension of the Mahābhārata another word brahmaṇā has been referred to :

Brihaspati saveneshṭvā surāpo brāhmaṇah punah,
Samitim brāhmaṇo gachchhediti vai brahmaṇah śrutih.¹

Here it could be an adjective of the hymns.

It is not desirable to jump to a conclusion and form any opinion on the use of this word ; further intensive research and delving into the vast literature could possibly help a correct explanation of this word.

3. Brāhmaṇa-as details of ritualism

In the brāhmaṇa literature this word has been commonly used as detailing the ritualism related to the different sacrifices or yajñas. It is expressed : Dūrohaṇam rohati tasyoktam brāhmaṇam.² In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, as reference to the context, Dūrohaṇa Brāhmaṇa, has been explained as : Dūrohaṇam rohati. Svargo vai loko dūrohaṇam. Svargameva tam lokam rohati ya evam veda. Yadeva dūrohaṇam 3 asau vai dūroho yo asau tapati. Kaśchidvā atra gachchhati sa yaddūrohaṇam rohatyetameva tadrohati. Hamsavatyā rohati. Hamsah śuchishadityesha vai hamsah śuchishat. Ityādi.³

It is evident the word Dūrohaṇa in the Dūrohaṇa Brāhmaṇa has been explained.

Similarly, it is expressed : Yadgaurivītam tasyoktam brāhmaṇam.⁴ In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa its brāhmaṇa or details are stated as : Gaurivītam shoḍaśī sāma kurvīta tejaskāmo brahmavarchaskāmas-tejo vai brahmavarchasam Gaurivītam. Tejasvī brahmavarchasi bhavati ya evam vidvān gaurivītam shoḍaśi sāma kurute. Nānadam shoḍaśi sāma kartavyamityāhuh.¹

The word Gaurivīta has been fully explained in this Gaurivīta-Brāhmaṇa.

Adopting the same method, it is expressed : Athāsmā Audumbarīmāsaṁdī sambharanti. Tasyā uktam brāhmaṇam.² Its brāhmaṇa has been mentioned earlier in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa as : Audumbarīm samanvārabhanta ishamūrjāmanvārambha ityūrjvā annādyamudumbaro yadvai taddevā ishamūrjāman vyabhajanta tat udumbarah samabhavattasmātsa trih samvatsarasya pachyate.³

Uvaṭa, another commentator, in his commentary on the Yajurveda, explains the word śruti as brāhmaṇa. He writes : Śrutir-brāhmaṇam⁴ i.e., śruti itself is a brāhmaṇa.

It is thus evident that the exponents of the brāhmaṇas, the ṛishis, had always considered this word as the explanation of the brahma i.e., the Veda itself.⁵

In the brāhmaṇa works another expression is : ityeka vyākhyānāḥ⁶ i.e., these ṛichas or verse after verse have similiar explanation. In such expressions, the brāhmaṇa related to such hymns is not mentioned. It, therefore, connotes that the word vyākhyāna also is a synonym of the commonly used word brāhmaṇa.

4. The brāhmaṇa works

The known recensions of the Vedas, all had a separate brāhmaṇa. Most of these brāhmaṇas are not extant. Similarly, most of the recensions are also not available. The exponents of the saṁhitās and the brāhmaṇa works were the common rishis. The brāhmaṇas were instructed simultaneously with the different recensions. The great grammarian Pāṇini has in two aphorisms mentioned two different types of brāhmaṇa works. In one aphorism he has referred to the brāhmaṇas in general as : Chhandobrahmaṇāni cha tadviśayāṇi.¹

In another aphorism he differentiates between the old and the new brāhmaṇas. He refers to them as : purāṇaprokteshu brāhmaṇa-kalpesu.² The demarcation line between the old and the new brāhmaṇa works is not, so far, clearly decided? Was it when Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa had propounded the Vedic recensions? The brāhmaṇas which had been propounded prior to the exposition of recensions by Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa were called as old brāhmaṇas and those which had been expounded by his disciples were known as new brāhmaṇas.

Jayāditya, the author of Kāśikā, includes in the old or purāṇa brāhmaṇas Bhāllava, Śāṭyāyana, Aitareya and amongst the new brāhmaṇas Yājñavalkya i.e., the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. He considers the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as a new brāhmaṇa.³ The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is named also Vājasaneyya Brāhmaṇa.⁴ Jayāditya includes Tāṇḍa amongst the old brāhmaṇas and mentions amongst the new brāhmaṇas, the Saulabha Brāhmaṇa.⁵

5. An Ātharvaṇa hymn—scope of the brāhmaṇas

The subjects detailed in the brāhmaṇas are also stated in the following hymn of the Atharvaveda : Tamitihāsaścha purāṇam cha gāthāścha nārāsaṁsīschānuvyachalan.¹ In this hymn any particular work is not mentioned ; the different subjects are mentioned in general. A collection of itihāsa, purāṇa, gāthā, nārāsaṁsī is to be found in the brāhmaṇa works.

6. Brāhmaṇa=pravachana or exposition

A synonym of the brāhmaṇa word is pravachana. This definition is expressed as : pravachana śabdena brāhmaṇamuchyate.² A Prāvachana-charaṇa is also referred to.³ In the Copper-plate grant of the Ganga ruler Śrī-Purusha, of Śaka year 693, this name has been mentioned as : Hāritagotrasya Nilakanṭhanāmādheyasya prāvachana charaṇasya.⁴ Vīramitrodaya in his Āhnikāprakāśa expresses a similar idea in the following line : Vāsishṭhah api cha kāṭhake pravachane vijñāyate adya śvo vā vijanishyamāṇah.⁵ It is stated in the Mahābhārata that while performing a Śrāddha ceremony the exponent of a brāhmaṇa is regarded as sacred and he heads the row of the brāhmaṇas as : Agrayā sarveshu vedeshu sarvappravachaneshu cha.⁶ A similar idea is separately expressed. An exponent of a brāhmaṇa is mentioned in Gobhilaḡrihya Karma - prakāśikā. The adoration or worship of the following ten brāhmaṇas is mentioned : Śaṭih.

7. Brāhmaṇa = viññāyate

Viññāyate is used to denote a reference from a brāhmaṇa work. The word has first of all been used in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa as : Ātmā vai sa yajñasyeti viññāyate,² i.e., he is the soul of a sacrifice personified as stated in a brāhmaṇa. Purushottama in his Pravara-mañjarī further elaborates its meaning when he states that such an expression is found in different śrutis but is not mentioned in the recensions.³

This word as mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa connotes a different meaning.⁴ It is also explained as :

- (a) Dharmasya hyamśabhāgbhavatīti viññāyate.⁵
- (b) Brahmaprasūtam hi kshatramṛidhyate na vyathate iti cha viññāyate.⁶
- (c) Garte vā pātyate pramīyate vā pāpīyānbhavetīti viññāyate.⁷
- (d) Anyatrāpi viññāyate ityukte śrutipāṭha ityavagantavyam.⁸
- (e) Kasminśchid brāhmaṇe viññāyate iti.⁹

Quotations of pravacana-brāhmaṇas from Taittirīya and other saṃhitās as well as from the brāhmaṇas are often referred to as iti

8. Brāhmaṇas—two types

Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara in his introduction to the commentary on Taittirīya Saṁhitā writes : Dvividham brāhmaṇam—Karma brāhmaṇam Kalpabrāhmaṇam cheti¹ i.e., in the Taittirīya and other saṁhitās and in the brāhmaṇas two types of brāhmaṇa works are mentioned. These are Karma brāhmaṇas and Kalpa brāhmaṇas. The Karma brāhmaṇas refer to ritualism, and the apportionment of the hymns, these neither praise nor censure.² The Kalpa brāhmaṇas have only the hymns. Their apportionment is not referred to.³

These definitions by Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara are old but have to be carefully considered as to how old these could be. He means by the word brahma a brāhmaṇa as : Brahmanāmantrairbrāhmaṇairvā.³

9. Brāhmaṇas—eight types

On the basis of the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad, Sāyaṇa in his commentary on the Taittirīya Āranyaka refers to eight types of brāhmaṇas. He writes : Brāhmaṇam chāshtādhābhinnam. Tadbhedāstu Vājasaneyibhirāmnāyate itihāsa purāṇam vidyā upanishadah ślokaḥ sūtrāpyanuvyākhyāni vyākhyānāni iti.⁴

Ācārya Śaṅkara has mentioned eight types of brāhmaṇas based on the same reference of the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad.⁵

10. Anu—brāhmaṇa

An aphorism of the Ashtādhyāyī reads : Anubrāhmaṇādinih.⁶

Jayāditya, author of Kāśikā writes : Brāhmaṇa sadṛśoayam

grantho anubrāhmaṇam¹ i.e., a work similar to a brāhmaṇa is called Anu-brāhmaṇa. Some of the minor brāhmaṇas of the Sāmaveda are at times called as Anu-brāhmaṇas.

Satyavrata Sāmaśramī mentions Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa, as a Anu-brāhmaṇa. In Niruktālochana, he writes : Tāmḍyāṁśabhūtāni, Tāmḍyapariśiṣṭabhūtāni vā anubrāhmaṇāni vā aparāṇyapi saptādhiyante cha,² i.e., except the Tāmḍya, the remaining seven brāhmaṇas of the Sāmaveda are Anu-brāhmaṇas. Kumārila considers all these as brāhmaṇas.³ In the Nidāna Sūtra many references are quoted as from Anu-brāhmaṇas.⁴

Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara writing his introduction to the Taittirīya-saṁhitā quotes from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa as : Anubrāhmaṇam cha bhavati aṣṭāvetāni havīmshi bhavanti. Iti.⁵

Mādhava in his commentary on Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa mentions the name of the brāhmaṇas of this Anūvāka as : Atha rājasūya-syānubrāhmaṇam.⁶ Varadatta-suta from Ānartta while commenting on Śāṁkhāyana Śrauta writes : Evam tarhi anubrāhmaṇametāt mahākaushītakodāhṛitam kalpakāreṇādhyāyatrayam.⁷

It appears that the portion of the Brāhmaṇas apportioned to Kalpa-sūtras by their authors is called Anu-brāhmaṇa.⁸

Anu-brāhmaṇas like the Anuśākhās are the sub-divisions of the brāhmaṇas.

Anu-pravachana is referred to in the Aṣṭādhyāyī.¹ A synonym of brāhmaṇa is pravachana. Anu-pravachana appears to be a synonym of anu-brāhmaṇa.

11. Brāhmaṇāchchhamṣī

This word is found in the hymns. In the Taittirīya Samhitā, Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara explains it as praised by the brāhmaṇas as : brāhmaṇādāhṛitya śamsati brāhmaṇāni śamsati vā.² Patañjali, author of Mahābhāṣya, expresses similarly while writing brāhmaṇāni śamsatīti brāhmaṇāchchhamṣī brāhmaṇebhyo gṛhītvā śamsatīti brāhmaṇāchchhamṣī,³ i.e., which has been borrowed from the brāhmaṇas. It implies that there were brāhmaṇa works anterior to the hymns or the mantras. Such a conception is against the logical sequence of history. It could plausibly mean : that borrowed from a brāhmaṇa work is anu-brāhmaṇa.

CHAPTER TWO

BRĀHMAṆAS—OLD AND NEW

Pāṇini mentions two types of brāhmaṇas, the old and the new, in an aphorism of Ashtādhyāyī : purāṇaprokteshu brāhmaṇakalpeshu.¹ Jayāditya in his critical gloss known as Kāśikā writes in detail on this aphorism : purāṇena chirantanena muninā proktāh. Brāhmaṇeshu tāvat Bhāllavinah. Śātyāyaninah. Aitareyaṇah. Kalpeshu Paimṅgikalpah. Purāṇaprokteshu iti kim. Yājñavalkāni brāhmaṇāni. [He places Bhāllava, Śātyāyana and Aitareya brāhmaṇas amongst the old and Yājñavalkya i.e. the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa amongst the new brāhmaṇas. In his annotation on another aphorism he mentions Tāṇḍa Brāhmaṇa amongst the old and Saulabha Brāhmaṇa as a new one as : Brāhmaṇāni khalvapi-tāṇḍinah. Bhāllavinah. Śātyāyaninah. Aitareyaṇah. Yājñavalkyena proktāni brāhmaṇāni yājñavalkyāni. Saulabhāni.³

It is written in the Lāṭyāyana Śrauta Sūtra : tathā purāṇam Tāṇḍam.¹ The Tāṇḍa Brāhmaṇa is qualified by the adjective purāṇa. Tāṇḍa Brāhmaṇa otherwise is listed with the new brāhmaṇas. This aphorism could mean that Tāṇḍa Brāhmaṇa was of two types, one of the old series and another of the new. Probably the available Tāṇḍa Brāhmaṇa is of the new series.

Was there a demarcation line between the old and the new brāhmaṇas? A reference to Indian history helps us to know it as the time of Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa. Those brāhmaṇas which were expounded along with the Kalpa-sūtras by the disciples of Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa were considered as new ones and those already expounded by Mahidāsa Aitareya and others before the time of Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa as old ones.

Gopi Chand Authāsānika in his commentary on a grammar work called Samkshiptasūtra, while writing on the sūtra : Ayājñaval-kyāderbrāhmaṇe includes Bhāguri as an old brāhmaṇa amongst Aitareya and Śātyāyana Brāhmaṇas;² Bhāguri Brāhmaṇa is of the older tradition. Paingalāyani Brāhmaṇa is also of the older tradition according to Baudhāyana Śrauta as : gām dakṣiṇām dadyāditi paingalāyani brāhmaṇam bhavati.³

Jayāditya while writing Yājñavalkyādayo achirakālā ityākhyā-neshu vārtā refers to the Yājñavalkya Brāhmaṇa as of the new series.⁴ There does not seem to have been concensus of opinion as Kātyāyana in his Vārttika writes : Yājñavalkyādibhyah pratishedhastulyakālāt and includes this brāhmaṇa in the older series.⁵ As a suggestion it may be mentioned that perhaps Kātyāyana accepted the meaning of the word purāṇa as used by Pāṇini as pūrva i. e., expounded earlier.

1. *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*¹

Aitareya Brāhmaṇa has eight pañchikās. Each pañchikā has five chapters. the complete brāhmaṇa, therefore, has forty chapters.

According to tradition which came down to Sāyaṇa, the exponent of this brāhmaṇa was Mahidāsa Aitareya. Shadguruśishya had preceded Sāyaṇa. He had written in the year 1252 his annotation or ṛitti on this brāhmaṇa. In the beginning of his ṛitti he mentions Aitareya as the son of Yājñavalkya and Itarā-Kātyāyani, who was the wife of Yājñavalkya as :

Āsīd vipro yajñavalko dvibhāryastasya dvitīyāmitareti chāhuh,
Sa jyeshthāyākṛṣṭachittah priyām tāmuktva dvitīyāmitareti hoche.²

This appears to be a surmise. He has also written : Mahidāsaitareyarshisaṁdrīṣṭam brāhmaṇam tu yat.³ There appears to be no objection to the accepted theory that Mahidāsa had compiled these forty chapters.

Aitareya Brāhmaṇa is of the older series. Following references from Chhāndogya Upanishad and Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa support the view :

- (2) Etaddha tadvidvān brāhmaṇa uvācha Mahidāsa Aitareyah.....sa ha shoḍaśaśatam varshāṇi jijiva.²

Āha, uvācha and jijiva refer to an action of the past.³ Here the death of Mahidāsa is alluded to. In the Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa, Mahidāsa is called a brāhmaṇa himself.

The present form of this brāhmaṇa was known to Pāṇini. In an aphorism he refers to brāhmaṇas which had either thirty or forty chapters : Trimśachchatvārimśatorbrāhmaṇe samjñāyām daṇ.⁴ Their names are not mentioned. Kaushitaki and Śāṅkhāyana Brāhmaṇas have thirty chapters. The Pāṇinian usage refers to these brāhmaṇas which have thirty chapters and to Aitareya Brāhmaṇa which has forty chapters. Shadguruśishya has named Aitareya Brāhmaṇa as chātvarimśa.

In the *Asvalāyana Grihya Sūtra*⁵, *Kaushitaki Grihya Sūtra*⁶ and *Śāṅkhāyana Grihya Sūtra*⁷ both Aitareya and Mahaitareya brāhmaṇas are alluded to. Possibly Aitareya had thirty and Mahaitareya had forty chapters. In this brāhmaṇa Śākala-Samhitā is indirectly referred to as : Śākalyaśabdah sarpaviśesha vāchī. Śākala nāmnoheh sarpaviśeshasya yathā sarpaṇam gamanam tathaivāyamagnishṭomah.⁸ The extant brāhmaṇa was propounded by Śaunaka. Another possibility could be that he added ten more chapters to the original brāhmaṇa which had only thirty chapters.

Some of the hymns referred to in this brāhmaṇa are not available in the Samhitā.¹

Special features

Tadāhu is a common phrase used in brāhmaṇas. The opinions of ṛishis who were exponents of brāhmaṇas are comparatively seldom quoted in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. The fundamentals of Paimgya, Śākala and Kaushītaki alone are quoted : Pūrvām paurnamāsīmupavasediti paimgyamuttarāsiti kaushītake yā purvāh.² Keith concludes that the chapter containing their quotations is an interpolation.³ We differ from him. It appears that Mahidāsa, like other exponents of brāhmaṇas, rarely used to add or change the traditional material. Śaunaka had revised this brāhmaṇa which had been earlier expounded by Aitareya and in all probability the available material at that time was added by him. In the first six pañchikās Somayāga is mentioned in this brāhmaṇa. In the last two pañchikās a coronation ceremony is narrated.

Date of Aitareya Brāhmaṇa : Keith's view :

Keith opines that the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa is comparatively older than the other brāhmaṇas. He writes : "The Aitareya has no allusion to Śvetaketu or the more famous Āruṇi and, therefore, we have another suggestion in favour of its comparatively older date."⁴ In this brāhmaṇa Bulila Āśvatarāśvi is mentioned. He has also been called as Buḍila Āśvatarāśvi.¹ He was a contemporary of Uddālakāruṇi according to Chhāndogya Upanishad.² The normal inference is that Mahidāsa having known a contemporary of Āruṇi, could have known Āruṇi himself. The latest research unmistakably supports this contention as Āruṇi is quoted in this brāhmaṇa itself as : Ha sma āhoddālaka āruṇiyam.³ This argument of Keith is not tenable.

The date of Mahidāsa Aitareya is later than the date of Vṛiddhadyumna, son of Abhipratārī.⁴

Mahidāsa himself in his commentary on Yajurveda Khaṇḍa of Carana-vyūha-sūtra quotes a verse from Mahārṇava as :

Tuṃgā kṛishṇā tathā godā Sahyādrīśikharāvadhi,
Ā āndhradeśaparyantam Bahvṛichaśchāśvalāyani.⁵

i.e., the brāhmaṇas following the Āśvalāyana recension of the Rigveda and studying the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa inhabited the region surrounded by Tuṃgabhadra, Kṛishṇā, Gōdāvarī and Sahyādrī upto the Andhra Pradesh, and portions of Mahārāshtra especially the region round about Nasik. Followers of this recension and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa are met in these regions.

mentioned in this brāhmaṇa. Lindner has appended a list of rishis at the end of his edition. The names of these three rishis are often repeated. The word punarmṛtyu is mentioned in it.¹ The basic principle of death and re-birth was always accepted.

Most of these brāhmaṇas in their present form had been composed at the same time and, therefore, a principle referred to in one brāhmaṇa was acceptable to other brāhmaṇas.

Tāmdya Brāhmaṇa refers to Kushītaka dynasty. Descendants of Kushītaka were outcastes. As householders, they had performed a sacrifice alongwith the impotent. In this sacrifice they had used the Kanīyāmsa-stoma and, therefore, none of them could obtain excellence in the sacrifice. They were considered as of lost brahma-charya for having falsely performed a sacrifice. The story is narrated as :

Ētena vai śamanīchāmedhrā ayajanta teshām Kushītakah sāmaśravaso grihapatirāsittān luśākapih khārgaliranuvyāharadavākīrshat kalīyāmsau stomābupāguriti tasmātkaushītakānām na kaśchanātiva jihīte yajñāvakīrṇā hi.²

In the Bodelian Library, Oxford, the manuscripts of this brāhmaṇa have the following colophon : Kaushītakimatānusārī Śāmkhāyana brāhmaṇam.³

Śreedhara Śāstri in his introduction to the Śāmkhāyana Āraṇyaka edited by him, expressed the view that the āraṇyaka portion of the brāhmaṇa was known as Śāmkhāyana Āraṇyaka.⁴

Mahidāsa in his commentary on the second kaṇḍikā of Charaṇa-Vyūha quotes from Mahārṇava :

BRĀHMAṆAS—OLD AND NEW

Uttare gurjaredeśe vedo bahvṛicha īritah, Kaushītakibrāhmaṇam cha śākhā śāmkhāyanīsthitā.¹

i.e., the brāhmaṇa related to the Śāmkhāyana recension was known also as Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa. In the same tradition Śāṃkara in his *Vedānta Sūtra*² accepts Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa as the name. As it is difficult to know the name of this brāhmaṇa, it is not easy to know the name of its author. Either Kaushītaki or Śāmkhāyana had propounded this brāhmaṇa. A genealogy at the end of Śāmkhāyana Āraṇyaka, mentions the names of rishis as :

Atha vaṃśah. Namō brahmaṇe nama āchāryebhyo Guṇākhyāchchhāmkhāyanādasmābhiradhītam Guṇākhyah Śāmkhāyanah Kaholātkaushītakah kaholah kaushītakiruddālakādāruṇeruddālaka āruṇih.³

Kahola Kaushītaki had his education from Guṇākhyā Śāmkhāyana, whose teacher was Uddālaka. Śāmkhāyana is the earliest āchārya in this tradition which may mean that Śāmkhāyana or his successor Kaushītaki had been the exponent of this brāhmaṇa.

Pāṇini had known the brāhmaṇa.⁴ Two names Kaushītaki and Mahākaushītaki are mentioned. Kaushītaki refers to thirty chapters of the brāhmaṇa. Mahākaushītaki could have included fifteen chapters of the āraṇyaka as well.

According to the verse from Mahārṇava, North Gurjara deśa abounded with the followers of the Śāmkhāyana recension of the Rigveda, whose brāhmaṇa was Kaushītaki. Manuscripts of this brāhmaṇa are mostly available in this region even today.

3. Śāṁkhāyana Brāhmaṇa

It was once considered that Kaushitaki or Śāṁkhāyana was the name of the same brāhmaṇa. Śāṁkhāyana Brāhmaṇa has been published separately,¹ and differs, though slightly, from the Kaushitaki Brāhmaṇa. It has thirty chapters. Its provenance is not mentioned in the Mahārṇava. Were there Śāṁkhāyana and Mahāśāṁkhāyana brāhmaṇas, like Kaushitaki and Mahākaushitaki brāhmaṇas?

*Brāhmaṇas of Śukla Yajurveda*1. *Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*²

The word śatapatha implies hundred chapters. It is expressed in Gaṇaratnamahodadhi : Śatam panthāno yatra śatapathah tattulyah śatapathah.³

This brāhmaṇa known also as Vājasaneyā Brāhmaṇa, is referred to in the Gaṇapāṭha of Pāṇini.⁴ It has fourteen kāṇḍas. Weber writes that this brāhmaṇa has 100 chapters or 68 prapāṭhakas, 438 brāhmaṇas, and 7624 kaṇḍikās.⁵ Eggeling considers some of these kāṇḍas as later addition.⁶ The twelfth kāṇḍa is called madhyama. Kāṇḍas ten to fourteen or eleven to thirteen were separate at one stage. Patañjali while commenting on an aphorism of Pāṇini writes in Mahābhāṣya :

Anusūrlakshyalakṣhaṇe sarvasāderdvigośchalah,

It refers to 100 or 60 chapters. It is of interest to note that the first nine kāṇḍas of this brāhmaṇa have only 60 chapters. In the opinion of Weber this brāhmaṇa had only 9 kāṇḍas and 60 chapters which were known as śashtipatha.² Agnichayana, the main theme of the 9th kāṇḍa, is taken as the end of this book. Ancient tradition specially prescribed its study as implied in the aphorism sāgnyādhite of Pāṇini.³ This corroborates the above view point.

Contrary to it Caland opines that the first 5 kāṇḍas of Mādhyandin Śatapatha are similar to the first 7 kāṇḍas of Kāṇva Śatapatha.⁴ The latter has 40 chapters in the 7 kāṇḍas. The Vājasaneyā Brāhmaṇa or the Mādhyandin Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa had the remaining 60 chapters. If so, at the time of Patañjali, Kāṇva Brāhmaṇa had 100 chapters instead of 104. Caland states that this explanation of the word śashtipatha is a conjecture only.

In Śāntiparva contents of this brāhmaṇa are described⁵ :

Tatah śatapatham kṛitsnam sarahasyam sasamgraham, included pariśeṣha-saṁgraha and this Śatapatha was unique. Probably this brāhmaṇa was expounded by Yājñavalkya in his old age.¹

It is of interest to know that the first nine kāṇḍas of the Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa have 60 chapters. The 10th kāṇḍa is called Agni-rahasya. The 11th kāṇḍa is named as ashtādhyāyī. This has 8 chapters. It is a collection of the contents listed in the earlier chapters. In the Mahābhārata, kāṇḍas 12 to 14 are called pariśeṣha.

The name Śāṇḍilya is often repeated in the kāṇḍas 6 to 9 of this brāhmaṇa. In these chapters the name of Yājñavalkya is omitted. In the preceding and subsequent chapters Yājñavalkya and principles enumerated by him are referred to. Weber² and Eggeling³ conclude that these chapters were separately expounded by different persons.

This very speciality is of the 10th kāṇḍa also. The ancient authors had known this speciality. Śaṅkara in his commentary on 3.3.19 of the Vedānta Sūtra writes : Vājasneyiśākhāyāmagnirahasye śāṇḍilyānāmāṁkitā vidyā vijñyātā.⁴ In a dynasty mentioned at the end of this kāṇḍa the name of Śāṇḍilya is referred to.

It is, therefore, safe to opine that a major portion of Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is much older like many other brāhmaṇas. Portion of it is considered to have been expounded by Śāṇḍilya. Its later compilation was by Yājñavalkya. At the end it is written : *Ādityānīmāni śuklāni yajūṁshi Vājasaneyena yājñavalkyenākhyāyante*⁵, i.e., these Śukla Yajuh were expounded by Vājasaneya Yājñavalkya. The same inference could safely be drawn from Mahābhārata and other works. Ādityāyana and Āṅgirasāyana, two divisions of vedic recensions, are clearly enumerated as : Dvyāni dvividhāni eva śuklayajūmshi ādityānām ādityasambandhīni āṅgirasāni āṅgirasasambandhīni. Atrādityapadena Yājñavalkyo grāhyah.¹

This cult difference, which emanated from separate sacrificial systems, is referred to in the Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as well. Reference to ādityānimāni indicates connection with Ādityāyana sect. Kātyāyana relates himself to the Āṅgirasāyana sect in Pratijñā Sūtra Parīśiṣṭa. (Śrauta Parīśiṣṭa).

A brahmachārī well versed in the Rigveda never finds any difficulty to read the other Vedas. It is easy for him to understand them. Similarly, a student who is conversant with the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is considered to be skilled in ritualism. It is easy for him to comprehend the other brāhmaṇas. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is the key to the meaning of the Vedas. It clearly explains all the subjects of the Vedas and is the correct exposition of the Vedic history. In the earlier quoted reference from the Mahābhārata, the sage Yājñavalkya rightly praises the importance of this brāhmaṇa, which is a unique contribution by him.

Two separate works are known as Pratijñā-Sūtra-Parīśiṣṭa. One is the appendix or parīśiṣṭa of Śrauta-sūtra and the other of the Śukla Yajurveda Prātiśākhya. In the latter, udātta and anudātta svaras used in this brāhmaṇa are named bhāṣhika-svara. The difference of svara implied that the brāhmaṇas were not Vedas as : Brāhmaṇe tūdāttānudāttau bhāṣhikasvarau.²

i.e. this sūkta of allegorical reference to the debate of Pururavā and Urvaśī is of fifteen richas, according to the opinion of the sages who followed the Rigveda. But the portion of the *Rigveda*¹ from which certain hymns are quoted in this brāhmaṇa has actually eighteen richas. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa here refers to a particular recension of the Rigveda which needs to be identified.

This brāhmaṇa refers to re-birth as : ati ha vai punarmṛityumuchyate,² i.e., a person is freed from the cycle of repeated births and deaths. A similar reference reads : kimtadagnau kṛiyate yena yajamānah punarmṛitumapajayati,³ i.e., an action related to Agni helps a person to win over the continuous cycle of birth and death. The idea of re-birth acceptable to all brāhmaṇas is evident from such a reference.

Kuvera Vaiśravaṇa, the Rākshasarāja, is mentioned in kāṇḍa thirteen.⁴ In the first nine kāṇḍas, a subject previously commented upon or explained like a hymn or to be explained later is qualified as : tasyokto bandhuh,⁵ so asāveva bandhuh,⁶ yathaiva yajustathā bandhuh,⁷ upari tasya bandhu,⁸ etc.⁹ whereas in the thirteenth kāṇḍa the expression changes to : tasyoktam brāhmaṇam.¹⁰ Based on this difference certain writers conclude the first nine kāṇḍas to be older. But the expression bandhuh should not determine the antiquity of the kāṇḍa. This very word is again used in the fourteenth kāṇḍa.¹¹

BRĀHMAṆAS—OLD AND NEW

In the first nine kāṇḍas, Yājñavalkya and his associates are referred to in the same manner as in the last four kāṇḍas. This, however, has to be admitted that portions of this brāhmaṇa are comparatively older like the other brāhmaṇas and this complete brāhmaṇa was re-cast and expounded by Yājñavalkya. Many sages and earlier rulers are mentioned in this brāhmaṇa.¹ Many kingdoms are referred to in it.

In the commentary on Charaṇa Vyūha, the following verse from Mahārṇava demarcates the portions of the country where this brāhmaṇa was in use :

Anga-vanga- kalingaścha kānīno gurjarastathā
Vājasaneyī śākhā cha mādhyandini pratishṭhitā,²

i.e. Anga, Bengal, Orissa, Kānina and Gujarat were the areas where this recension was in use. Besides, this recension is common in the Punjab and Uttar Pradesh. Great scholars like Harisvāmī and Uvaṭa were the followers of this recension of the Yajurveda.

2. *Kāṇva Śatāpalha Brāhmaṇa*³

Kāṇva Śatāpalha Brāhmaṇa has 104 chapters, 446 brāhmaṇas, and 5865 kaṇḍikās.⁴ This brāhmaṇa has 17 kāṇḍas. Śaṅkarāchārya and other scholars accept the two last chapters of Kāṇva Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad as supplements. Śaṅkara in his commentary on the fifth chapter of Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad writes : *pūrṇamada ityādi khilakāṇḍamārabhyate*⁵ i.e., the supplement fifth kāṇḍa now begins with pūrṇamada. If the last two chapters are considered as supplements, this brāhmaṇa has only 102 chapters. Possibly, two more chapters were added at some stage.

The difference between the Kāṇva and Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is negligible except the arrangement of kāṇḍas and formation of sentences.

3. *Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa of the Kṛishna (or black) Yajurveda*¹

Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa has three ashtakas. The first two ashtakas are named as pārakshudra and agnihotra. Portions of the third ashtaka are individually named. These three ashtakas have 28 prapāṭhakas. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara, in his commentary names these as praśnas. Its edition published from Mysore enumerated 78 anuvākas in the first, 96 in the second and 179 in the third ashtaka i.e., 353 anuvākas in all. This brāhmaṇa is an appendix to the Taittirīya Samhitā. The main purpose of expounding the brāhmaṇa was to complete the incomplete portions of the main samhitā. It abounds with hymns spersed throughout the brāhmaṇa. A subtle form of the story of Yama and Nachiketā is available in the brāhmaṇa.

Its compilation by Tittiri, a student of Vaiśampāyana is evident from the name of this brāhmaṇa. The kāṭhaka portion appears not to fit in it.² It, however, forms its part as mentioned in the sequence of the kāṇḍas.³

Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara does not consider this kāṭhaka portion as expounded by Tittiri. He writes in the beginning of his commentary : Evamaśvamedhāntāni tittiriproktāni kāṇḍāni vyākhyātāni. Atha kāṭhakāgnikāṇḍānyashtau.⁴

Human sacrifice is mentioned in this kāṭhaka. The first four kāṭhakas, titled as Sāvitra, Nāchiketa, Chāturhotra and Vaiśvasṛija are a portion of the brāhmaṇa. Four āraṇyakas : Aruṇaketuka, Pañchachityāni, Divaśśyenopādyāśchesṭayah and Svādhyāya Brāhmaṇa form part of the āraṇyaka. Aruṇa and Ketuka, two sages, are mentioned in the Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata.¹

A verse from Mahārṇava quoted by the commentator of Caranavyūha-sūtra specifies the areas of provenance of this brāhmaṇa. :

Āndhrādi dakṣiṇāgneyī godā sāgara āvadhī, yajurvedastu taittirya āpastambī pratishṭhitā.²

i.e., the recension of the Yajurveda by Tittiri was prevalent in Andhra Pradesh etc, south and east of Narmada, and areas on the banks of Godāvarī down to the sea. This statement holds good even today. Burnell writes that in South India even pet cats had knowledge of this recension of the Taittirīyas.

Brāhmaṇas of the Sāmaveda

1. *Tāmdya Brāhmaṇa*³

Exponents of the recensions of Sāmaveda and its brāhmaṇas differ. Vīramitrodaya expresses the difference as : trayodaśaite sāmagāchāryāḥ svasti kurvantu tarpitāḥ.....daśaite pravachana kartārah svasti kurvantu tarpitāḥ.⁴ i.e., these thirteen sages of the Sāma recensions and these ten exponents of the brāhmaṇas. The Tāmdyas had an independent recension. Śaṅkara writes : anyeapi śākhinastāṇḍinah śātyāyaninah.¹ Again he writes : yathaikeshām śākhinām tāmḍinām, pairiṅginām cha.²

The available Chhāndogyopanishad is related to the Tāmḍyas and was once known as Tāmḍya-Rahasya Brāhmaṇa as corroborated by Śaṅkara's commentary.³ Tāmḍya recension is a sub-division of the Kauthumas. Professor Caland has quoted two references from this brāhmaṇa which are different from the Kauthuma Samhitā :

Sāma Samhitā

This Tāmḍya Brāhmaṇa was perhaps connected to some other Sāma recension. This brāhmaṇa had two varieties, the old and the new.⁵ It has 25 prapāṭhakas and 347 khaṇḍas. In his commentary Sāyaṇa specifies adhyāyas instead of prapāṭhakas. However, prapāṭhakas are specified in the manuscript copies.

The death of Tāmḍya is narrated by Vyāsa.⁶ He had renounced his mortal body in the Dvāpara-yuga. This brāhmaṇa is called Pamcaviṃśa, Praudha, or Mahābrāhmaṇa as well. For its comparison with eight brāhmaṇas, its name was Mahābrāhmaṇa. Soma sacrifices are mentioned in this brāhmaṇa. Hymns of the Sāmaveda related to such sacrifices are all mentioned in it. Names of ṛishis to whom hymns or sacrificial rituals were revealed are narrated in it. Authors of Ārshānukramaṇī and Sarvānukramaṇis had taken extensive help from this brāhmaṇa : quite a few recensions are mentioned in it according to its commentary by Sāyaṇa. These are Bhāllavi,¹ Triharva,² and Karadvisha.³ Saudantajāti of Bhārata is alluded to in it.⁴ Condemnation of the sacrifice of the Kaushītakas is also mentioned in it.⁵

Many sacrifices used to be performed on the banks of Sarasvatī and Drishadvatī.⁶ Details of the conversion of vrātyas to arya is mentioned. Vrātyas were be-fallen people and were called patita sāvitṛika. These vrātyas were of the following types :—

- Those who are not celibate and are not traders or agriculturists.⁷
- Those who take meals worthy of brāhmaṇas and kill, those who should not be killed.
- Unordained, whose speech is like those who have been ordained.⁸
- Who use a turban etc. which has a red border.⁹

It is evidenced by Bhāshika Sūtra that Tāmdya and other brāhmaṇas of the Sāmaveda were accented. It is written : Śatapathavattāmdibhāllavinām brāhmaṇasvarah,¹⁰ i.e., like the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa the brāhmaṇas of Tāmdya and Bhāllavi were accented. A similar reference is found in Nārada Śikshā :

Dvitiyapṛathamāvetau Tāmdibhāllavinām svarau, tathā Śatapathāvetau svarau Vājasneyinām.¹¹

Such references are sufficient to prove that Tāmdya and other brāhmaṇas were studied with their accents. These brāhmaṇas had lost their accents during the period of Kumārila Bhaṭṭa. He writes in his Tantra Vārttika :

In this brāhmaṇa Para āhṇāra (āṇṇāra), king of Kosala is mentioned.² Namī-Sāvyā, king of Videha is also mentioned.

This brāhmaṇa was expounded by a sage named Tāmdī. A preceptor of the same name is mentioned in Sāma-Vidhāna Brāhmaṇa.³ In Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : atha ha smāha tāmḍyah means Tāmḍya says so.⁴

Hopkins writes, "It (Tāmḍya) represents a period earlier than that of the more famous Śatapatha and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas,...It is rather to the earlier date of the great brāhmaṇa than to delicacy that the intrusion of the word into other tales as a sort of secondary divinity is lacking."⁵

Hopkins view needs critical examination as Tāmḍya Brāhmaṇa is quoted in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.

According to Mahārṇava, and the commentator of Charaṇa Vyūha. this brāhmaṇa related to the Kauthuma recension was prevalent in Gujarat. This is correct even today.

Shadviṃśa Brāhmaṇa has five parapāṭhakas. Sāyaṇa in his commentary does not recount the number of parapāṭhakas but refers to

This prapāṭhaka is an inter-polation according to some scholars. If so, Sāyaṇa's arrangement of chapters would be proper. The first prapāṭhaka has 7, the second 10, the third 12, the fourth 7, and the fifth has 12 khaṇḍas i.e., in all 48 khaṇḍas. Sāyaṇa has not commented on the last two khaṇḍas of the fifth prapāṭhaka. He accepts the end of this brāhmaṇa at the tenth khaṇḍa of the fifth prapāṭhaka; as such there are only 46 khaṇḍas. Perhaps, in the last prapāṭhaka there was some inter-polation.

As evident from the name Shadvimśa, this brāhmaṇa is a portion of the Pañchavimśa Brāhmaṇa. Subrahmanyarichā of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is explained in it.¹ Dress of a priest at the time of a sacrifice is prescribed as : lohitoṣṇīṣha lohivāsaso nivītā ṛitvijah pracharanti² i.e., red turbaned, red clothed, or wearing dhotis with red borders are priests called nivīta. Shadvimśa Brāhmaṇa related to the Kauthumī recension of the Sāmaveda was expounded by Tāṃdi and his close disciples.

3. Mantra Brāhmaṇa = *Chhāndogya Brāhmaṇa*¹

Mantra Brāhmaṇa has two prapāṭhakas. Each prapāṭhaka has 8 khaṇḍas. This brāhmaṇa is a collection of hymns from the four Vedas. Some hymns are also borrowed from other brāhmaṇas as well. These hymns have been recommended for different ceremonies in the Gobhila Gṛihya Sūtra. The brāhmaṇas of the Kauthuma recension of the Sāmaveda are called Chhāndogya Brāhmaṇa. This brāhmaṇa is particularly named as such. Satyavrata Sāmaśramī and other scholars consider that 40 prapāṭhakas of the following brāhmaṇas had once formed Tāṃdya or *Chhāndogya Brāhmaṇa*² :

- (i) 25 prapāṭhakas of Pañchavimśa Brāhmaṇa.
- (ii) 5 prapāṭhakas of Shadvimśa Brāhmaṇa.
- (iii) 2 prapāṭhakas of Mantra Brāhmaṇa.
- (iv) 8 prapāṭhakas of Chhāndogyopanishad.

Mantra Brāhmaṇa and Chhāndogya Brāhmaṇa were accepted by Śaṃkara Svāmī as related to Tāṃdya. In his commentary on Vedānta Sūtra 3.3.25--26 ; 36, he writes :--

4. *Daivata or Devatādhyāya Brāhmaṇa*⁴

Daivata Brāhmaṇa is also known as Devatādhyāya Brāhmaṇa. This brāhmaṇa of 3 khaṇḍas has 26, 11 and 25 kaṇḍikās respectively. Guṇe writes about the third khaṇḍa, “We have therefore no hesitation in saying that the whole of the third khaṇḍa of the Daivata Brāhmaṇa is an imitation of the Nirukta and quite out of place in the brāhmaṇa.”⁵

Specially, the metres are described in this brāhmaṇa. Derivations of the names of the metres are mentioned in it. Yāska in his Nirukta borrows certain derivations from this brāhmaṇa.

Catalogue of Oxford University mentions on page 383 B a manuscript No. 466 as Chhandovijinti (vijini ?) Its other name is Sāmagānāma chhandah. The former name is also mentioned in the Gaṇapāṭha of Pāṇini.⁶ In the beginning of this manuscript a verse refers to Pañchavimśa and Daivata Brāhmaṇas as the brāhmaṇas of the Tāmḍis :-

Brāhmaṇāttāmḍinaśchaiva piṅgalāchcha mahātmanah,
 Nidānādukthasāstrāchcha chhandasām jñānamuddhṛitam.⁷

It is related to the metres of the Sāmaveda. This manuscript is also enlisted in the second report of Peterson⁸ as Upanidāna or Chhandovitchaya. The writers on metres have taken constant help from such works.

5. *Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa*¹

Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa belonged to the followers of the Kauthuma recension of the Sāmaveda. Names of the songs of Sāmaveda are mainly described in it. These songs form an integral part of the āraṇyaka. Devatādhyāya and Ārsheya Brāhmaṇas had once formed part of the same brāhmaṇa or these were two separate chapters of a brāhmaṇa. Sāyaṇa commenting on *svasti devaṛishibhyaścha*² writes : *ata eva devatā devaṛishibhyaścha iti. Devā ṛishayaścha ye Ārsheyadevatādhyāyābh-yām pratipāditāstatsakāśāchcha svasti bhavati.*³ Sāyaṇa had also accepted these two as one brāhmaṇa.

The three prapāṭhakas of the brāhmaṇa have 28, 25, and 29 khaṇḍas respectively.

This brāhmaṇa is also an index to the hymns of Sāmaveda. Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa 1.1 published by Satyavrata Sāmaśramī differs from a quotation by Kātyāyana in his Rik-Sarvānukramaṇi. As Shadguru-śishya considers this reading to be of Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa this brāhmaṇa could be pretty old.

6. *Sāmavidhāna Brāhmaṇa*⁴

Sāmavidhāna Brāhmaṇa has three prapāṭhakas having 8, 8 and 9 khaṇḍas. Incantations and rituals are mainly described in it. It is full of interpolations if taken as an old brāhmaṇa.

7. *Samhitopanishad Brāhmaṇa*¹

Samhitopanishad Brāhmaṇa is a minor brāhmaṇa having only one prapāṭhaka with 5 khaṇḍas. Names of hymns of the Sāmaveda to be sung in the village or the forest are mentioned in it. It is a collection of old verses from brāhmaṇas or sentences taken from them. The origin of the well known sentence of Nirukta : vidyā ha vai brāhmaṇamājagam is in the third khaṇḍa of this brāhmaṇa.² It contains various sūtras of the Sāmaveda. Their origin is referred to in the second and the third khaṇḍas.

8. *Vamśa Brāhmaṇa*³

Vamśa Brāhmaṇa is another brāhmaṇa with 3 khaṇḍas describing the genealogy of the preceptors of the Sāmaveda. It has similar genealogies as narrated in Śatapatha or Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇas.

9. *Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa*⁴

Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa has three main divisions; the first has 360, the second 437 and the third 385 khaṇḍas, i.e., 1182 khaṇḍas in all. This division is not authentic. Another division⁵ mentions :

1 a Samhitopanishad Brāhmaṇam, edited by Burnell AC, Mangalore, 1877

b Samhitopanishad Brāhmaṇam, commentaries of Dvijarājabhaṭṭa and Vedārthaprakāśa of Sāyaṇa, Śarma, Tirupati, 1965

THE BRĀHMAṆĀS

1. Mahā Brāhmaṇa	360 khaṇḍas
2. Dvādaśāha Brāhmaṇa	388 khaṇḍas
3. Mahāvratā Brāhmaṇa	152 khaṇḍas
4. Ekāha Brāhmaṇa	153 khaṇḍas
5. Ahina Brāhmaṇa	99 khaṇḍas
6. Satra Brāhmaṇa	37 khaṇḍas
7. Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa	84 khaṇḍas
8. Upanishad Brāhmaṇa	154 khaṇḍas

1427 khaṇḍas

This division incorporates Ārsheya and Upanishad Brāhmaṇas which have 238 khaṇḍas. On deleting these khaṇḍas the difference in the two divisions is of seven brāhmaṇas only. Another division of khaṇḍas is enumerated at the end of Satra Brāhmaṇa in the same list.¹ The first six brāhmaṇas of this division have 1190 brāhmaṇas. A critical edition could eliminate this minor difference.

The divisions of this brāhmaṇa are also mentioned in Prapamchahṛidaya as :

Tadbrāhmaṇamuttarapādah khaṇḍasamūhah. Tatpramāṇam sahasrāda-dhikamashṭachatvāriṃśaduttaram śatatrayam. Tadāraṇyakam pañchāśaduttara-śatam khaṇḍāh.²

i.e., the brāhmaṇa is divided into 1348 khaṇḍas and the āraṇyaka into 150 khaṇḍas.

Śaṅkara in the beginning of his commentary on Kenopanishad writes:

Keneshitamityādyopanishatparabrahmavishayā vakatavyeti navamas-yādhyāsyārambhah. Prāgetasmātakarmānyaśeshatah parisamāpitāni. Samasta karmāśrayabhūtasya cha prāṇasyopāsanānyuktāni karmāṅgāsānavishayāṇi cha anantaram cha gāyatrāsānavishayam darśanam vāṁśāntamuktam.³

i.e., beginning with keneshitam and describing metaphysical subjects should be called Upanishad. This is the beginning of the ninth chapter. In the earlier eight chapters, rituals are described in detail. Subsequently gāyatra, Sāma and vaṁśa are narrated.

It appears that the manuscripts available to Śaṅkara contained eight chapters upto the end of the genealogy of the Upanishad Brāhmaṇa. In the eighth chapter the portion of the Upanishad was not included, as the ninth chapter relating to the Upanishad used to be separate. It is certain that Śaṅkara had a similar Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa as is available these days.

Another name of this brāhmaṇa is Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa. Oertel¹ and Caland² had published a few khaṇḍas of it. In the absence of sufficient manuscript data, they could not edit it.

Many of the sentences of this brāhmaṇa are similar to those found in Tāṇḍya, Śaḍaviṁśa, Śatapatha and Taittirīya Saṁhitā. Many of the hymns are found for the first time in it. Their composition is different from that available in the Vedic literature. Most of the subjects described in it are completely new and are not found in other brāhmaṇas like Tāṇḍya etc. Its eight brāhmaṇas related to the Kaṭhuma recension of Sāmaveda have been detailed above.

A proverb, in one form or the other common to most of the languages of the world, is found in it. The sage cautions his wife not to talk aloud as even the earth has ears in the expression : mochchairiti hovācha karṇinī vai bhumiriti.³

In the beginning khaṇḍas, details of daily oblations to the sacrificial fire are described. Some of the famous similies are also described.

This brāhmaṇa was compiled by Jaimini a famous preceptor of Sāmaveda and the worthy disciple of Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vedavyāsa and his disciple Talavakāra. Its beginning and end has the following verses :

Ujjahārāgamāmbhodheryo dharmāmṛitamāñjasā, nyāyairnirmathya bhagavān sa prasīdatu Jaiminih.¹

Sāmākhilam sakalavedagurormunīndrādvyaśādavāpya bhuvī yena sahasraśākhām, Vyaktam samastamapī sundaragītārāgam tam Jaiminim Talavakāragurum namāmi.²

These refer to true and authentic history and should be accepted as such. Sage Jaiminī be pleased who had culled the nectar of religion by churning the vast ocean of the Vedas. Obeisance to him who had his knowledge of the Sāmaveda from Vyāsa, the best among munis, the great teacher of all the Vedas who had revealed to the world their thousand recensions and he who was the origin of the songs of the Sāmaveda and to him who is the teacher of Talavakāra.

The commentary on Charaṇavyūha describes the region of provenance as kārṇātake Jaimini prasiddhā,³ i. e., the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa was famous in the Kārṇātaka region. Manuscripts of this recension have mostly been found from Malabar, Trivandrum and regions round about.

10. Jaiminiya Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa

Jaiminiya Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa,⁴ as mentioned above,⁵ has only 84 khaṇḍas. This short brāhmaṇa is considered as the anukramaṇi of the Talavakāra recension. Mainly it mentions the ṛishis connected with hymns to be sung in the villages and forests and rituals like āgneya connected with Sāma-parvas. Most of its readings differ from the Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa, wherein a hymn is ascribed to two or more than two rishis. Here, only one rishi is normally mentioned. Perhaps, Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa has interpolations or varied readings or its nomenclature has undergone changes. This, however, is not a positive conclusion.

11. Jaiminiyopanishad Brāhmaṇa

*Jaiminiyopanishad Brāhmaṇa*¹ has four chapters. Each chapter has anuvākas and each anuvāka has khaṇḍas. It is an ancient brāhmaṇa of the Kauthuma recension. It is full of t̃āntric ritualism and incantations. Sacrifices and modes of their performance are mentioned. Om and Gāyatrī hymn are analytically explained. Anecdotes are also narrated.

Brāhmaṇa of Atharvaveda

*Gopatha Brāhmaṇa*²

Gopatha Brāhmaṇa has two divisions, pūrva and uttara. The former has five and the latter six prapāṭhakas. Once this brāhmaṇa was more detailed. In the Ātharvaṇa Caraṇavyūha or Ātharvaṇa Pariśiṣṭa, the expression tatra gopathah śataprapāṭhakam brāhmaṇamāsīt. tasyāvaśiṣṭe dve brāhmaṇe pūrvamuttaram cheti,³ implies that this brāhmaṇa had hundred prapāṭhakas; now, only pūrva and uttara portions of it are extant.

Western scholars on the basis of language believe it to be a fairly new brāhmaṇa; difference in language could not be the sole factor to decide difference in time. A different conclusion based on other evidence need not be ignored. This point will follow detailed discussion.

In its pūrva portion a number of sacrifices are enumerated.¹ Its end has a collection of verses mentioning prativeda brahmacharya of twelve years.² Mantra, kalpa and brāhmaṇas are mentioned at one place. Gāyatrī hymn is explained in different forms.³ In other brāhmaṇas metre and the presiding deity etc. of Atharvaveda are not mentioned. In the pūrva portion, moon as the presiding deity, the metres and water as its loka are mentioned.⁴ Herein, a supplement śruti of Sāmaveda is described.⁴

Hermitages of Vasishṭha on huge boulders situated in the centre of the Vipāt river are mentioned.⁵ If it is not a metaphysical reference, it could refer to regions near Kulu and Vyāsa-kunḍa. Some of the ancient kingdoms are also mentioned.⁶ The first part yadindrādo dāśarājña iti of Atharvaveda 10.128.12 refers to the story of Indra.⁷

The three metrical units of the word Om̐kāra are separately described :

yā sā prathamā mātṛā brahmadevatyā raktā varṇena yā sā dvitīyā mātṛā vishṇudevatyā kṛṣṇā varṇena yā sā tṛtīyā mātraiśānadevatyā kapilā varṇena⁸

i. e., the first metrical unit of Brahmā is of red colour ; the second of Vishṇu is of black colour and the third of Īshāna is of yellow colour. Brahmā, Vishṇu and Rudra are mentioned in one and the same place in this brāhmaṇa.

The following verse quoted by Patañjali is from its pūrva portion 1.26 :

Followers of the Śaunaka recension of the Atharvaveda were mostly from Gujarat.² Even today, the few who follow this Veda and its recension are found in Gujarat only.

Cycle of birth and death is referred to in it. A glance at the comparative data published by Duke Gaastra in his edition proves that its readings are common to those of the other brāhmaṇas. It is thus evident that even though compiled last of all, it is still an old brāhmaṇa. The following line from Nirukta is similar to that found in it and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa : Yasyai devatāyai havirgrīhītam syāttām manasā dhyāyed vashaṭ-karishyan.³

Its readings are :

- a. tām dhyāyed vashaṭkarishyan⁴
- b. tam manasā dhyāyan vashaṭ kuryāt.⁵

Keith writes that yāska had with him the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa.³ Yāska perhaps had this reading from some other brāhmaṇa which is at present lost.

CHAPTER THREE

THE LOST BRĀHMAṆAS

Patañjali the great sage, scholar and lexicographer writes : grāme grāme kāṭhakam kālāpakam cha prochyate¹ i.e., in each village the Kāṭhaka and Kālāpa recensions were read and taught. It was the golden age. Brāhmaṇas, the great saviours of Indian culture had throughout been instrumental in the preservation and furtherance of the Vedic literature which used to be the life and soul of the customs and polity of this nation, crux of its life principles and had contributed to the prosperity, rise and solidarity. The same Vedic culture is down-trodden. Innumerable manuscripts of the valuable literature have been lost due to atrocities of the rulers and invaders, ravages of time, and utter disregard and negligence. These factors contributed to the loss of hundreds of manuscripts. Once their number was more than a few hundred. Had these been available today the ambiguity in the interpretation of Vedic hymns could not have crept in. It could have been possible to translate the Vedas in their proper and true form and put them before the world. Still, we come across the name of a few brāhmaṇas which have been lost but are quoted in the available Sanskrit literature. These references help us to assess the position of those brāhmaṇas.

*Brāhmaṇas of the Rigveda*1. Paiṁgi, Paiṁgya, Paiṁgāyani Brāhmaṇa

A recension of the Rigveda is called Paiṁgya in Prapañchahridaya: Bāhvrīchasyaitareya bāshkala kaushītaka jānanti bāhavi gautama śākalya bābhavya māṇḍavya paiṁga mudgala śaunaka śākhāh.¹

Patañjali in his Nidāna Sūtra makes clear that this recension was not related to the Sāmaveda: yathā chaitat paiṁgino adhiyate chhandogāśchāpyenameke adhiyate.²

Paiṁgya was known as Madhuka according to Bṛihaddevatā.³ Paiṁgya and his philosophy is often quoted in Kaushītaki, Śatapatha, Aitareya and other brāhmaṇas. Paiṁgi rishi is mentioned in the Caraka-Samhitā of the Ayurveda.⁴

Paiṁgāyani Brāhmaṇa is twice quoted in the Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra:

(a) Tadabhāve anaḍvān pūrvavāḍetāni karmāṇi karotīti Paiṁgāyani brāhmaṇam bhavati;⁵

(b) yadītarāṇi na vidherannapyanaḍvāhameva dadyāt, anaḍuhi ha vā eṭe cha kāmā aṭascha bhūyāmsa iti Paiṁgāyani brāhmaṇam bhavati.⁶

Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra refers to Paiṁgalāyani Brāhmaṇa:

Śaṅkara in Śārīraka Mimāṃsā Bhāṣya quotes it :

In Satyāśhāda Śrauta Sūtra and in Mahādeva’s Vaijayanti commentary on it, this brāhmaṇa is referred to :

(b) Tathā cha Paimgi Grihya Smṛitih—‘Garbhasthe prete mātoreva syādāśaucham jāta ubhayoh.....’³

Paimgi Grihya is also quoted in Grihya-ratna.⁴ A sentence from Paimgi-Rahasya in Madanā-Pārijāta is an interpolation.⁵ Reference from Paimgi Śruti and Rahasya found in Parāśara Vijaya commentary on Brahma Sūtra are also interpolations.⁶ A reference from Paimgi Śruti is available in Vishṇu-Tattva-Nirṇaya by Ānanda Tīrtha.⁷

2. Bahvṛicha Brāhmaṇa

As expressed in Prapañcha Hṛidaya : tatra sāmaveda sahasradhā yajurvedah ekottaraśatadhā bāhvaṛicha ekaviṁśatidhā atharvavedo navadhā,⁸ the word bahvaṛicha in general refers to Rigveda. It has been similarly expressed in Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁹ Mahābhāshya expressed it similarly: ekaviṁśatidhā bāhvṛichyam.¹⁰ Rigveda had more ṛichas as compared to the other Vedas. Possibly, those charaṇas having largest number of ṛichas were called bahvṛicha. Māṇdukeya could be such a charaṇa or bahvṛicha was a sub-division of it.

Bahvricha could also be a recension: ‘..... pratyuvācha bahvrichavadevainaṇḍra iti tu eva paṁgyasya sthitiṛāsaindrāgna’ iti kaushītakeh.¹ Allegorical narration of the conversation between Pururavā and Urvaśī as: tadetaduktapratyuktam paṁchadaśarchcha bahvrichā prāhuh,² relates to the *sūkta*³ of fifteen richās according to the bāhvrichās. This refers to a recension.

Bahvricha Brāhmaṇa has been quoted in nine and bahvricha separately in three places in the Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra. None of the former nine quotations is available in the Aitareya and Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇas. It could, therefore, be accepted that bahvricha was also a recension.

Devapāla in his commentary on Kāṭhaka - grīhya - sūtra quotes: iti śrutatvāt rohitavarṇam bahvriche choktam.⁴ The commentary on Śāṁkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra refers to bāhvrichyam-bahvrichāmnāyoktam⁵ and bahvricha śākhāvishayau.⁶

Śabara in his commentary on Mīmāṁsā Darśana quotes from this brāhmaṇa : bahvrichabrāhmaṇe śrūyate - yāvajjīvamagnihotram juhōti iti,⁷ and bahvrichabrāhmaṇe śrūyate—yāvajjīvamagnihotram juhōti, yāvajjīvam darśapūrṇamāsābhyām yajeteti.⁸ Aitareya and Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇas do not have these two readings.

Pāṇini has two special references : chhandogaukthikayājñika-bahvrichanaṭāñ ṇyah⁹ and gotram cha charaṇaiḥ saha aupagavī. Kāṭhī, bahvrichī.¹ In his commentary on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, Śaṅḍaguruśishya writes: tasmādyo brāhmaṇo bahvricho vīryavān syāt so asyāchchāvākīyām kuryāt.² This brāhmaṇa is mentioned in the Āhnika-kāṇḍā of Smṛiti-chandrikā: Kshīrahotā vā juhuyāddhanena hi sa parikrīto bhavatīti bahvricha-brāhmaṇam.³ Bhartrihari, commenting on Mahābhāshya, quotes a passage in it as from Bahvricha-sūtra: bahvricha sūtrabhāshye.⁴ Mahābhāshya has more readings: kathaśchāyam bahvrichaścha⁵ and anricho māṇave bahvrichaścharaṇākhyāyām.⁶ A disciple who has not read the Rigveda is called anricha in relation to bahvricha charaṇa. Here, bahvricha is accepted as a charaṇa.

Kumārila Bhaṭṭa writes in Tantra-vārttika: grīhyagranthānām cha prātisākhyalakṣhaṇavat praticharaṇam pāṭhavyavasthopalabhyate. Tadyathā vāsishṭham bahvrichairev śaṅkhalikhitoktam cha vājasaneyibhiḥ.⁷ Followers of bahvricha charaṇa read Vāsishṭha-sūtra. Bahvricha is a charaṇa according to Kumārila also.

Āditya Darśana in his commentary on Kātha-grīhya quotes a sūtra from Bahvricha Grīhya as: prādushkaraṇakāle chedgrīhya upaśāntah śrotriya-grīhādāniya tūshṇīm grīhyabhasmāni prakshipyāgnihotra-devatābhyo hutvā grīhi patni vopavasatīti bhasmanyevāgniprakshepasya bahvricha grīhyepi darśanāt.⁸ This sūtra is not available in Āśvalāyana and Śāṁkhāyana Grihyas. There used to be separate Bahvṛtcha Grihya-sūtra. Medhātithi in his commentary on Manusmṛiti, similarly writes : Kaṭhānām grihyam bahvṛichāmāśvalāyanām cha grihyamiti.¹

Śrīmad-Bhāgavat also refers to bahvṛicha:

Iti bruvāṇam saṁstūya munīnām dirghasatṛiṇām, vṛiddhah kulapatih sūtam bahvṛichah śaunako abravīt.²

i.e., Śaunaka, resident of Naimishāranya, was a bahvṛicha. Śaunaka was a follower of Rigveda or exponent of the bahvṛicha recension of this Veda.

3. Āśvalāyana Brāhmaṇa

Raghunandana in the Malamāsa - prakaraṇa of his Smṛititattva quotes from Āśvalāyana Brāhmaṇa: Āśvalāyanabrāhmaṇam 'prāchyām diśi vai devāh somam rājānamakrīṇan soma vikrayīti'.³ A similar reading is available in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.⁴ Possibly, modern scholars from Bengal and Mithilā considered Aitareya and Āśvalāyana Brāhmaṇas as same.

4. Gālava Brāhmaṇa

Gālava is one of the five Śākala recensions of the Rigveda. Samhitā, brāhmaṇa and sūtra of this recension are not yet available. Gālava had hailed from Pāñchāla or Pañchāla and was also known as Bābhavya. Bābhavya recension is mentioned in Prapañcha-hṛidaya and is called Bābhavya Pāñchāla in Kāma sūtra as:..... saptabhiradhikaraṇai bābhavyah pāñchālah samchikshepah.⁵ Proper

Patañjali refers to a special rule by Gālava in his Mahābhāshya which implies the existence of a Gālava Brāhmaṇa :

Āchāryadeśaśilanena yaduchyate tasya tadvishayatā prāpnoti. Iko hrasvo aṅyo gālavya.¹ Prāchāmavṛiddhāt phinbahulam iti² gālavā eve hrasvān prayuñjiran prākshu chaiva hi phin syāt. Tadyathā jamadgnirvā etatpncchamamavadānamavādyat tasmānnājāmadagnyah pañchāvattam juhōti.³

Brāhmaṇas of Yajurveda

1. Charaka Brāhmaṇa

Charaka Brāhmaṇa, the main brāhmaṇa of the Charaka recension of Yajurveda, is often quoted in many works. Its āraṇyaka was also available. A manuscript of the same was preserved in the library of the D.A.V. College, Lahore.⁴ It is almost similar to Maitryupaniṣad of seven prapāṭhakas. Kāṭhaka, Maitrāyaṇī and other sub-divisions of Charaka recension are often quoted under the name of Charaka requiring careful sifting of samhitā and portions of the brāhmaṇa.

Sāyaṇa writes : Aitihāsikapakshe charakabrāhmaṇe itihāsa āmnāyate.⁵

Devarāja Yajvā quotes from this brāhmaṇa in his commentary on Nighaṇṭu : Tathā cha charakādhvaryūṇām brāhmaṇe itihāsaḥ śrūyate.¹ This reading available in *Kāṭhaka-saṃhitā*² was possibly borrowed from it.

Durga in his commentary on Nirukta writing charakādhvaryavah.....grihṇanti³ and chārake punarādhvaryave śrutih⁴ quotes Maitrāyaṇi-saṃhitā 1.3.11 and 4.6.3 respectively.

Skanda Svāmī also writes : evam charakādhvaryūṇām brāhmaṇe itihāsaḥ śrūyate.⁵ This reading is not available in the Kāṭhaka-saṃhitā.

Uvaṭa in his commentary on Śukla Yajurveda mentions different readings of the hymns followed by Charakas :

- (a) Charakāṇām mantravikalpāḥ.⁶
- (b) Charakaśrutau pūshṇe lalāṭa iti paṭhyate tadabhiprāyametāt.⁷

This reading is not available in both the Kāṭhaka and Maitrāyaṇi Saṃhitās.

Varadatta-suta, hailing from Ānartta, in his commentary on Sāṃkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra quotes often from this brāhmaṇa :

- (a) Dvitiya iti trayodaśāmāvāsyāyāmāhutayo hūyanta iti charakāṇām śrutirupāsuyājapratishedhārthā ;⁸

- (b) Charakāṇām brāhmaṇasvaro mantreṇa tulyo bhavati.⁸

Mahāsvāmī in his commentary on Bhāshika Sūtra similarly writes : Charakāṇām mantrasvaratulyo bhavati.⁹

In the commentary on Pratijñā-Sūtra it is stated : charakāṇām brāhmaṇe... .. iti.¹⁰

2. Śvetāśvatara Brāhmaṇa

Śvetāśvatara is a sub-division of the Charakas according to Charaṇavyūha.⁴ Śvetāśvataropanishad or Mantropanishad is well known, and is a part of the āraṇyaka of this brāhmaṇa. Followers of this recension had another Mantropanishad. Atmānanda in his commentary on Asyavāmīya-sūkta quotes a hymn.⁵ This hymn is not found in the Upanishad now available.

Viśvarūpāchārya quotes from this brāhmaṇa : śvetāśvatarāschah—sa kṛishṇamṛigo abhavat sa kṛishṇamṛigo bhūtva prithivīmanva-charat. Tamanu dharmaschachāretyādi.⁶

3. Kāthaka Brāhmaṇa

Kātha recension is a sub-division of the charaka recension of Yajurveda. Kāthas were northern Charakas : śyāmāyana udīchyeshu uktah kāthakālāpinoh.⁷ Disciples of Vaiśampāyana Charaka were known as charakas; similarly disciples of Kaṭha were also known as Kaṭhas. An aphorism of Ashlādhyāyī has the same inference.¹ Ādya Kaṭha was one of the sixteen priests for the yajña performed by Uparichara vasu as mentioned in the Mahābhārata, as : ādyah kaṭhastaittirīścha vaiśampāyanapūrvajah.² Ādya Kaṭha seems to be the principal or the main preceptor of the many Kaṭhas known by the same name. Kalāpa and Kaṭha were present during the inaugural function of the great assembly of Yudhishthira.³

Kaṭha is also a charaṇa and must have had many recensions. Jayāditya writes : charaṇaśabdāh kaṭhakalāpādayah.⁴ Prāchya Kaṭha and Kapishthala Kaṭha are mentioned in Charaṇavyūha.⁵ Mārcha Kaṭha is mentioned in Ātharvaṇa Charaṇavyūha. The doctrines of the Kaṭhas known as *Kāṭhaka*⁶ are highly praised in Mahābhāshya : yatheha bhavati Pāṇinīyam mahat suvhitam ityevamihāpi syāt Kaṭham mahat suvhitamiti.⁷ The treatise of Pāṇini is impressive and great, so is the treatise of the Kaṭhas.

Extracts of Kaṭha Brāhmaṇa are published in Kāṭhaka Saṃkalana.⁸ Caland had published portions of this brāhmaṇa, comprising of Agnyādheya, Amā brāhmaṇa of Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā 40.7, Grahesṭi and hymns of it, Upanayana, Śrāddha, Mekhalā and Aśitibhadra brāhmaṇas.⁹ Manuscripts of its āraṇyaka portion are available in the libraries of Europe. In his article Dr. Schroeder had published portions from it.¹⁰ A pundit from Srinagar, Kashmir, had stated to the late Pandit Bhagavad Datta that its manuscript is still available.

Ashtaka 3. 10-12 of Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa is named Kaṭha or Kāṭhaka Brāhmaṇa.

Kaṭha Śrutyupanishat published by Schroeder appears to be the last portion or supplement of this brāhmaṇa.¹ Viśveśvara Sarasvatī in his Tati Dharma Saṁgraha quotes passages of this Upanishad as from Kāṭhaka Brāhmaṇa.²

Śatādhyayana Brāhmaṇa was another name of this brāhmaṇa. Bhaṭṭa Jayanta in his Nyāya-mañjarī writes : tathā cha kāṭhaka-śatādhyayane brāhmaṇe brahmaudane śrūyate.....³ Devapāla in his commentary on kaṭha-grihya mentions this name.⁴

Brāhmaṇa of Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā 40. 7 is very useful.⁵ One of these brāhmaṇas with slight variants is available in the Nirukta.⁶ Kāṭhaka Brāhmaṇa is quoted in Nirukta also.⁷ Devarāja - yajvā quotes a lengthy passage from it in Nighaṇṭu.⁸ Durgāchārya refers to it in his commentary on the Niukta.⁹

In Śuddhi-kaumudī a reference from Kāṭhaka Brāhmaṇa reads : Tathā Kaṭha Brāhmaṇam-hastī vai bhūtvā svarbhānuraṁśubhirādityam tamasapi dadhātīti. This passage is not available in the Kaṭha-saṁhitā having portions of the brāhmaṇa. Possibly, this passage is of the original Kāṭhaka Brāhmaṇa.¹⁰

Aparārka in his commentary on Tājñavalkya-smṛiti writes: api cha kāṭhake pravachane vijñāyate.¹ Pravachana means a brāhmaṇa. A Kāṭhaka Śruti is also quoted in it.²

Vāsishṭha Dharma-sūtra refers to this brāhmaṇa : api cha kāṭhake vijñāyate. Api nah śvo vijanishyamāṇah patibhih saha śayīranniti strīṇāmindradatto vara iti.³ A slightly variant reading of this is available in the Mahābhāshya.⁴ Maskarī, in his commentary on Gautama Dharma-sūtra quotes this sentence slightly differently: 'Api nāryo vijanishyamāṇah patibhih saha śayīran' iti,' Vājasaneyaśruti darśanāt.⁵ It is not reproduced in the published Kāṭhaka-saṃhita and therefore, had formed part of the brāhmaṇa, Another lengthy passage of the Kāṭha Brāhmaṇa is quoted in Vāsishṭha Dharma-sūtra:

tatra sado brāhmaṇasya śarīram vedih saṅkalpo yajñah paśurātmā raśanā buddhih sado mukhamāhavanīyam nābhyāmudarnirgārhapatyah prāṇodhvaryura-pāno hotā vyāno brahmā samāna udgātātyendriyāṇi yajñapātrāṇi ya evam vidvānindriyairindriyārtham juhōtītyapi cha kāṭhake vijñāyate⁶

A passage of Kāṭha-śruti is quoted in the commentary on Vaikhānasa - śrauta - sūtra.⁷ Āpastamba - śrauta - sūtra has the reading : atha kāṭhakah.⁸ A Kāṭhaka-śruti is quoted in Smṛiti-Chandrikā : Maivam-śavāgnayo vā etc patnyām mṛitāyām dhāryante iti kāṭhaka-śrutyā teshām pitṛimedhaikārthatvaśravaṇāt.⁹ Medhātithi in his commentary on Manusmṛiti quotes a slightly different reading : na vāgnayo ha vā. Ete patnyām pramītāyām dhāryante iti.¹ A similar reading is available in the Bālakṛīḍā commentary on Yājñavalkya-Smṛiti : tathā cha kāṭhakeśrutau 'śavāgnayo vā ete bhavanti, ye patnyām pramītāyām dhāryanta', iti.²

Another Kāṭhaka-śruti is quoted by Maskarī in his commentary: tathā cha kāṭhakaśrutih - anaśanenakarśito agnimāroheta iti.³ This again is not reproduced in the published Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā : it therefore formed part of Kāṭhaka-Brāhmaṇa. A number of quotations from Kāṭhaka-Brāhmaṇa are available in Kāṭhaka-grihya-sūtra. This brāhmaṇa is quoted in Samaya - prakāśa.⁴ It is also quoted in the commentary on *Vijñāna-bhairava*⁵ : śrutismṛitishu tu dinakshapayoh śvatvena nirdeśah kṛitah mṛityutdratvāt āyurharṇāt janahimsakatvāchcha. Tathā cha brāhmaṇam.⁶

A manuscript in the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona, titled Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (Kāṭhakam) is a mutilated copy of Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā as it has divisions called sthānakas.⁶ It is not a copy of Kāṭhaka-Brāhmaṇa.

4. Maitrāyaṇī Brāhmaṇa

Charaṇa-vyūha classifies six divisions of the Maitrāyaṇī : mānava, vārāha, dundubha, chhāgaleya, hāridravīya and śyāmāyaṇīya.⁷ The exponent of this recension was Maitrāyaṇī, and his disciples were known as Maitrāyaṇīya. All the old followers of this recension from Nasik had expressed their ignorance of this brāhmaṇa and had pointed out that this brāhmaṇa forms part of the samhitā itself. Maitrāyaṇī Brāhmaṇa is referred to in Baudhāyana śrauta-sūtra : samachaturaśrābhiragnim chinute daivyasya cha mānushasya cha vyāvṛityā iti maitrāyaṇīya-brāhmaṇam bhavati.¹ This passage is not available in the samhitā and therefore the brāhmaṇa portion was separate from it.

This brāhmaṇa is quoted in Satyāśhāḍa-śrauta-sūtra : Maitrāyaṇīyabrāhmaṇe yannopaśriṇuyād badhirah syāditi doshaśra-vaṇāditi bhāvah.²

Venkaṭa Mādhava quotes this brāhmaṇa as :

Na bhāllavakam asmābhistathā maitrāyaṇīkam, brāhmaṇam charakāṇām cha śrutam mantropabrimhaṇam.³

Viśvarūpāchārya quotes a śruti in Bālakṛīḍa : tathā cha śruti-athānyah parivrāḍekaśāṭīparihito muṇḍa udarapātryaranyanītyo bhikshārthi iti.⁴ Viśveśvara quotes this śruti in his Yati Dharma samgraha as Maitrāyaṇī śruti. The reference in Śatadūshaṇī by Vedāntadeśika⁵ is referred to as śruti and smṛiti in Bālakṛīḍa commentary.⁶ A manuscript of Maitrāyaṇī-mantra-samhitā in Baroda is mostly different from the published Maitrāyaṇī Samhitā.⁷

Upanishadic literature was the exponent of a recension named Jābāla.¹ A disciple of Vājasneya Yājñavalkya, he was contemporary of Janaka and others. Sthapati Garga refers to a Jābāla-śruti in his Pāraskara-grihya-paddhati: dakṣiṇapūrvedvāre dvyaratnike jābālaśruteretadupalabdham.² Another reference from Jābāla-śruti is quoted in Bālakṛiḍā: Evam hi śrūyate—sa yadā rājānamunnetonnayati, athainasvina upatishṭhante ata.....yasyaivam vidusha evamenasvino avabhṛithamabhyavayantīti jābāliśrutih.³ This also, probably, is from the brāhmaṇa.

Portions of Jābāla Upanishad appear to be older whereas Bṛihajjābālopanishad is much later. Maskarī in his commentary on Gautama-dharma-sūtra quotes from this Upanishad :

- (a) Jābālaśrutāvapi--nakhāni nikṛitya yajñopavitam viśṛijya iti;⁴
- (b) Yathā jābāliśrutih--Yassampannāya putrīm dadhyāt so agniṣṭoma phalamavāpnōti iti.⁵

stated in Charaṇa-vyūha : tatra taittirīyakānāma dvibhedā bhavanti. Aukheyāḥ khāṇḍikeyāścheti.¹ Five recensions of the Khāṇḍikeyas are mentioned in the Charaṇa-vyūha. Khāṇḍika is mentioned by Pāṇini in an aphorism : Tittirivaratantukhaṇḍikokhāchchhaṇa.² Disciples of Khāṇḍika were known as Khāṇḍikeya.

Khāṇḍika Audbhāri is mentioned in *Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā*³ and Jaiminīya-brāhmaṇa.⁴ A solitary reference of Khāṇḍikeya Brāhmaṇa is available in Bhāshika-sūtra : Teshām charakāṇām madhye khāṇḍikeyaukheyānām brāhmaṇe chatvārah svarāh.....⁵

7. Aukheya Brāhmaṇa

According to Charaṇa-vyūha, Aukheya is also a recension of Tajurveda. It is referred to in Bhāshika-sūtra.⁶

8. Hāridravika Brāhmaṇa

Hāridravīś followed a recension of Tajurveda according to Charaṇa-vyūha. Sāyaṇa in his commentary on Rigveda quotes from a brāhmaṇa of this recension : Svarabhānumāyayā sūryasyāvṛttirhāridravike samāmnātā⁷. Nirukta also quotes this brāhmaṇa : Yad arodīt tad rudrasya rudratvam' iti hāridravikam.⁸ Durgāchārya writes : Hāridravo nāma maitrāyaṇīyānām śākhābhedaḥ.⁹ Patañjali refers to Hāridravikas in his Mahābhāshya : Hāridraṇaḥ Taumburaṇaḥ

Tumburu as a recension is both related to Yajurveda and Sāmaveda. Its brāhmaṇa is mentioned in the Mahābhāṣya as : hāridraviṇah taumbaraviṇah bhāllavinah.³

10. Āhvaraka Brāhmaṇa

Āhvarakas are a sub-division of the Charakas according to Charaṇa-vyūha. Svaras of the Āhvarakas are mentioned in Taittirīya Prātiśākhya.⁴ A hymn of Āhvaraka recension is quoted by Yādava Prakāśa in his commentary on Piṅgala-sūtra : Devastvā savitā madhupāmktām viśvacharshaṇih. Sphītyeva naśvarah.⁵ Durgāchārya in his commentary on Nirukta also refers to it : Uktam chāhvarakāṇām-brāhmaṇaspatyābhiragnimupatishṭhet iti.⁶ This reading is not available in the extant brāhmaṇa works. It is quoted in Sampradāya-paddhati which is not published, so far, and forms part as a manuscript of the Punjab University Library, Lahore.⁷ Śobhākara in his commentary on Nāradya Śikṣā quotes it : Kāthakalāpapravitteshu taittirīyāhvarakeshu cha.⁸ Kārṇika-Gomī in his commetary on Dharmakīrti's Pramāṇa-vārttika writes : Idānīmapī kānichid ā hu ra ka prabhṛitīni śākhāntarāṇi virālādhyetrikāṇi.⁹ Āhvaraka here refers to Āhvaraka. Kankati as a recension is referred to in the word Kāṅkatāh in the Mahābhāshya: Krauḍāh kāṅkatāh maudah paippalādah.² The Veda to which this recension was related is not determined, so far. This brāhmaṇa is referred to in Āpastamba-śrauta-sūtra: Nāvidviśāṇayoh saṁsavo vidyata iti kankati brāhmaṇam bhavati.³ This reading is not traceable in the available brāhmaṇas.

12. Chhāgaleya Brāhmaṇa

Disciples of Chhagali ṛishi were known as Chhāgaleya. Chhāgaleya is a division of the Taittirīyas according to Charaṇa - vyūha. Pāṇini writes : Chhagalino ḍhinuk.⁴ Jayāditya, in his commentary on the same, writes : Chhagalinā proktamadhīyate chhāgaleyinah.⁵ In Śākaṭāyana - vyākaraṇa—Chhāgala ātreyaḥ chhāgaliranyah—is with reference to this context.⁶

A reference in Baudhāyana - śrauta - sūtra : nāvidviśāṇayoh saṁsavo vidyata iti chhāgaleya brāhmaṇam bhavatītyāñjīgaviḥ⁷ is quoted as from Kankati Brāhmaṇa in Āpastamba - śrauta - sūtra. Skanda Svāmī in his commentary on the Rigveda refers to Chhāgaleya Brāhmaṇa: Evam hi Chhāgaleyinām śrutau prayogaḥ - dakṣiṇena hastena devānasṛijāt.⁸ Chhāgaleya - śrauta - sūtra is referred to in Śāṅkhāyana - śrauta - sūtra : Evam Chhāgaleyinām sūtra evoha idṛśaḥ paṭhitah.⁹

1. Bhāllavī Brāhmaṇa

Bhāllavī was one of the six disciples of Lāngalī. Bhāllavī recension had once its brāhmaṇa. Baudhāyana - dharma - sūtra refers to a gāthā of the Bhāllavīs : Athāpya atra bhāllavino gāthāmudāharanti.¹ A śruti of Bhāllavī recension is available in Sureśvara's Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad:²

Atah samnyasya karmāṇi sarvāpyātmāvabodhatah, hatvā avidyām dhiyaiveyāttadvishṇoh paramam padam. 219.
Iti bhāllaviśākhāyām śrutivākyamadhīyate. 220.

Bṛihaddevatā also has corroborative evidence :³

- (a) esha eva parāmṛishṭo bhāllavibrāhmaṇedvṛichah, nidānasaṃjñake granthe chhandogānāmitiśrutih.
- (b) Tasmādye adyāpi vāsishṭhāh sadasyāh syustatkarhīchit, Arhayeddakshinābhīstān bhāllaveyī śrutistviyam.

Nidāna - sūtra has a similar passage. Bhāllavīs had their Upanishads as well. A principle of Bhāllavīs is narrated in Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa : bhūtiriti bhāllavinah. Prāṇam vā anuprajāh paśavo bhavanti. Sa ya evametam bhūtiritiupāste bhavatyeva prāṇena prajāyā paśubhih.⁴ The Bhāllavī recension had been expounded Āshāḍa Bhāllaveya¹ and Indradyumna Bhāllaveya² are mentioned in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa.

Bhāllavīs are mentioned in the Mahābhāshya: Hāridraṇah Taumburaviṇah Bhāllavinah.³ Jayāditya also mentions Bhāllavīs :⁴

(a) Brāhmaṇāni khalvapi - Tāmḍinah. Bhāllavinah. 4.2.66

(b) Brāhmaṇeshu tāvat - Bhāllavinah. 4.3. 105

Bhāllavi Brāhmaṇa is quoted in Drāhyāyana - śrauta - sūtra : Tathā cha bhāllavibrāhmaṇam bhavati - yo anupagītam samādatte..... tasmādapyupageyam.⁵ This reading is not traceable in the extant brāhmaṇas. This brāhmaṇa is referred to in Āpastamba - śrauta - sūtra : Atha bhāllavikam.⁶ Its name is mentioned in Upagrantha - sūtra by Kātyāyana.⁷ Bhāllavi Brāhmaṇa is oft referred to in Nidāna - sūtra :

Bhāllavīs are mentioned in the Tāṃḍya Brāhmaṇa : Tāmetām- bhāllavaya upāsate tasmātte pratigrihṇantah parivarttānna chyavante.⁷ Rudradatta writes about this brāhmaṇa.⁸ Ānandatīrtha in his Vishṇutattvanirṇaya refers to a Bhāllaveya - śruti.⁹ Venkaṭa Mādhava has also referred to this brāhmaṇa.

2. Kālabavī Brāhmaṇa

Kālabavī is a recension of the Sāmaveda. References to its kalpa, nidāna and saṃhitā are not yet available; but brāhmaṇa of this recension is referred to in a few works. It is written in Āpastamba -

5. Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa

Was Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa separate from Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa. Talavakāra was the disciple of Jaimini. Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa is at times referred to as Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa. Why the same brāhmaṇa was named after two ṛishis ? Possibly Talavakāra was a recension of the Jaiminīs. However, a few references to a Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa are available; the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa does not refer to them :

(a) Dhanvina in his commentary on Drāhyāyana - śrauta - sūtra writes : Talavakārastu gāyatrāsānavat.⁷

*Brahma - sūtra.*¹(c) Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa is quoted in Śrūta - prakāśikā - ṭikā.²(d) Sāyaṇa in his bhāṣya on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa writes :
tathā cha talavakārā āmananti - 'dīrghajihvī vā asuryā sā' iti.³
Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa has almost a similar reading : dīrghajihvī ha vā asury āsa⁴(e) Sāyaṇa in his bhāṣya on Tāmdya brāhmaṇa writes : tathā cha talavakāra - brāhmaṇam.⁵*Miscellaneous Brāhmaṇas*

Ravages of time have destroyed most of the Vedic literature. Once, each recension had its own brāhmaṇa ; though the difference amongst them used to be minor. At present, only references to some of the lost brāhmaṇas are available in the literature. At times, their names are merely referred to. Some of the lost brāhmaṇas referred to in literature, now cannot be related to any recension.

1. Āruṇeya Brāhmaṇa

Arūṇa had a son named Uddālaka. Uddālaka had belonged to the Gautama dynasty and was famous as Uddālaka Āruṇī. Uddālaka Āruṇī was a disciple of Dhaumya Āyoda who lived during the reign of Pārikshita Janamejaya of Panchāla. Āruṇeya is remembered in Mahābhāṣya : Āruṇinah śatyāyaninah.⁶

Āruṇeya Brāhmaṇa is mentioned in Tantra - vārttika.⁷

2. Saulabha Brāhmaṇa

Rigveda possibly had a recension named Sulabha. Sulabhā

Maitreyī is mentioned in the Rishi - tarpaṇa portion of Śāṅkhāyana-grīhya - sūtra,¹ Āśvalāyana - grīhya - sūtra and Kaushītaki - brāhmaṇa.² Was this brāhmaṇa named after this Sulabhā ?

Mahābhāshya refers to this brāhmaṇa :

(a) Yājñavalkyāni brāhmaṇāni saulabhāni. 4.2.66

(b) Yājñavalkyāni brāhmaṇāni. Saulabhanīti. 4.3.105

Saulabha Brāhmaṇa is mentioned in Kāśikā alongwith Yājñavalkya and other new brāhmaṇas.³ Saulabha Brāhmaṇa was expounded by the great sage Sulabhā, born of kshatriyas, who had a lively discussion with king Janaka of Videha on meta-physics. Was this kshatriya princess named Maitreyī also? Could it be possible that this brāhmaṇa belongs to Rigveda ?

3. Śailālī Brāhmaṇa

Śailālaka recension is mentioned in Ashtādhyāyī : Pārāśaryeṇa proktamadhīyate pārāśariṇo bhikshavah. Śailālino naṭāh. Bhikshunāṭa - sūtrayoh iti kim. Pārāśaram. Śailālam.⁴ Jayāditya in his Kāśikā also refers to it.⁵

Śailālī Brāhmaṇa is referred to in the Āpastamba - śrauta - sūtra : Samudro vā esha yadahorātrastasyaite gādhe tīrthe yatsandhih tasmātsandhau hotavyam' iti Śailālī - brāhmaṇa bhavati.⁶ Devaṇabhaṭṭa in the Āhnika - kāṇḍa of Smṛiti - chandrikā repeats this quotation of Āpastamba - śrauta - sūtra.⁷

bhāshya refers to a lengthy passage from this brāhmaṇa.¹ He refers to this brāhmaṇa in other places, as well.² Was Śailālī a recension of the Rigveda ?

4. Parāśara Brāhmaṇa

Parāśara recension is mentioned as of Bāshkala - Charaṇa of the Rigveda. An example in the Mahābhāṣya reads : pārāśarakalpikah.³ This kalpa was certainly of the Parāśara recension of the Rigveda.

Kumārila refers to Aruṇa - parāśara - brāhmaṇa in his Tantra - vārttika : aruṇa - parāśara - śākhā brāhmaṇasya kalparūpatvāt.⁴ Possibly, Aruṇa - parāśara recension was a sub - recension of parāśara recension.⁵

Arunaparājī Kalpa is mentioned in Kāśikā.⁶ Is it a separate recension ?

Aruṇa - parāśara - gotra is mentioned in the gotra portion of Baudhāyana - śrauta - sūtra.⁷

Did Yajurveda have a parāśara recension ?

5. Māshaśarāvī Brāhmaṇa

Drāhyāyana - śrauta - sūtra refers to 'vāta ā vātu' iti māshaśarāvī-vayah.⁸ Dhanvina in his commentary on the same writes : māshaśarāvī nāma kechichchhākhinah. Vāta ā vātu iti trīṣam stotriyāmāhuriti.⁹

6. Kāpeya Brāhmaṇa

Kāpeyas had a separate gotra from the *Āngirasa*s according to Kāśikā.¹ Those belonging to the āngirasa - gotra were Kāpyas. Patañjala Kāpya mentioned in Bṛihadāranyaka - upanishad was of āngirasa - gotra.² Śaunaka Kāpeya is referred to in Jaiminiya - upanishad - brāhmaṇa.³ The gotra of this Kāpeya is mentioned in the Jaiminiya - Brāhmaṇa.⁴ Kāpeyas are mentioned in Kaṭha - *saṁhitā*⁵ and Pañchaviṁśa - brāhmaṇa.⁶

Kāpeya recension and Kāpeya - Brāhmaṇa are quoted in Satyāshāda - śrauta - sūtra :

(a) Nā somayājī saṁnayadatho khalvāhuh kāpeyāḥ saṁneya-mevāsomayājīneti.⁷

8. Nirukta Brāhmaṇa

Nirukta Brāhmaṇa is quoted in Taittiriya - upanishad - bhāṣya.¹ A Nirukta recension is mentioned in Nyāya - pariśuddhi by Vedānta - deśika.²

9. Anvākhyāna Brāhmaṇa

Dr. Caland had addressed the late Pandit Bhagavad Datta in his letter dated August 11, 1925 : I have discovered the most curious fact, that to our Vādhūla - sūtra belongs a special brāhmaṇa, called Anvākhyāna. Not only this simple fact but the text itself is of the highest interest. The Vādhūla - sūtra pre - supposes the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa (or a text nearly identical with it) and the Anvākhyāna contains secondary brāhmaṇas. Dr. Caland published forty six lengthy quotations from Anvākhyāna Brāhmaṇa in 1926, in the fourth volume of Acta Orientalia.

10 - 11. Bāshkala Brāhmaṇa and Māṇḍukeya Brāhmaṇa

Bāshkala Brāhmaṇa and Māṇḍukeya Brāhmaṇa are referred to on the first page of the list of Manuscripts in the Library of Kavīndrā - chārya Sarasvatī.

12 - 13. Trikharva and Karadvisha Brāhmaṇas

Trikharva and Karadvisha recensions are mentioned by Sāyaṇa.³ These recensions also possibly had their brāhmaṇas.

References from brāhmaṇas are available in Āpastamba - śrauta - sūtra, Baudhāyana - dharma - sūtra, Vāsisṭha - dharma - sūtra, Āpastamba - dharma - sūtra etc. These references are quoted in the name of Vājasaneya and Bahvṛicha. These references are not traceable in the extant brāhmaṇas of Vājasaneyas or Bahvṛichas. Possibly, Bahvṛichas and Vājasaneya Samhitās had many more brāhmaṇas. Vājasaneyīs had Mādhyandina Śatapatha, Kāṇva Śatapatha and *Jābāla Brāhmaṇas*¹ and also a few more, as well. Some of these might have been named as Śatapatha or Shashṭipatha.

3 2.8.3 ; 2.15.4 ; 3.6.4

Reference to a brāhmaṇa in *Baudhāyana - dharma - sūtra*² appears to be from a lost brāhmaṇa of the Vājasaneyīs as it is very similar to a reading in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.³ The cycle of birth and death is implied in it.

Besides, most of the commentaries refer to readings from lost brāhmaṇas. These explain some of the Vedic dictums. It is a desideratum that all such references should be collected in one place and published for a study by Vedic scholars.

CHAPTER FOUR

CONTEMPORARY SAGES AND RULERS

The brāhmaṇas had been expounded by a large number of sages. Life and works of most of these sages are not known. With the loss of most of the brāhmaṇas, even the names of these sages have been lost. The sages and rulers mentioned in the brāhmaṇas were mostly contemporary i.e., the time gap was not more than two hundred years or three generations. An idea of their works helps to know the period of compilation of the brāhmaṇas. King Janaka of Videha had met Śvetaketu Āruṇeya, Somaśushma Sātyayajñī and Yājñavalkya. It is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : Janako, ha Vaidehah brāhmaṇairdhāvayadbhih samājagāma. Śvetaketunāruṇeyena, somaśushmeṇa sātyayajñinā, yājñavalkyena.⁴ It is evident that :

1. Janaka
2. Śvetaketu Āruṇeya
3. Somaśushma Sātyayajñī, who is also mentioned in : taduhovācha Sātyayajñih.²

याज्ञवल्क्येन, 11.6.2.1, ŚB

2 तदु होवाच सात्ययजिः, 13.5.3.9, ŚB

4. and Yājñavalkya were contemporaries. A genealogy in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa mentions : tam haitamuddālaka āruṇih, Vājasaneyāya yājñavalkyāyāntevāsina uktvovācha.....¹ i.e., Uddālaka Āruṇī spoke to him for his disciple Vājasaneya Yājñavalkya. This genealogy gives the following list of the teacher and the taught :

5. Uddālaka Āruṇī
6. Vājasaneya Yājñavalkya
7. Chūḍa Bhāgavitti
8. Jānaki Āyasthūṇa
9. Satyakāma Jābāla

Śvetaketu Āruṇeya was the son of Uddālaka Āruṇī. It is stated in Chhāndogyopanishad : Śvetaketurhāruṇeya āsa. Tam ha pitovācha.....² and Uddālako hāruṇih śvetaketum putramuvācha.....³ Vājasaneya Yājñavalkya was the disciple of Uddālaka Āruṇī. Śvetaketu being the son of the teacher was like a brother to Yājñavalkya. In the grand meeting organised by Janaka, Uddālaka had put the question to his disciple Yājñavalkya : Atha hainamuddālaka āruṇih prapachchha Yājñavalkyah.⁴ He had become a saṁnyāsi like Yājñavalkya. It is mentioned in the Jābāla Upanishad : Paramahansaṇāma saṁvartakāruṇih śvetaketuh.⁵ A similar reference is available in Nāradaṇḍaparivṛājakopanishad.⁶

Madhuka Pairṅgya is also mentioned as Pairṅgya in *Śatapatha*⁷ and other brāhmaṇas : etaddha sma tadvidvānāha pairṅgya,⁸ i. e., thus knowing Pairṅgya spoke. He has also been referred to as Madhuka.⁹

Tam ha Pravāhaṇo Jaivaliruvācha.³ Almost a similar reading is available in Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad.⁴ Medhātithi, in his commentary on Manusmṛiti, quotes a passage about Śvetaketu, from a lost brāhmaṇa : Śvetaketurha vā āruṇeyah. Asti me pañchāleshu kshatriyo mitram iti.⁵

He is mentioned in Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa.⁵ In Chhāndogyopanishad, he is referred to as the udgātā of the Naimishīs.⁶ According to Pāṇini he was of the Darbha gotra and not of Āgrāyaṇa gotra.⁷

22. Glāva Maitreya and Baka Dālbyha are mentioned in the Chhāndogyopanishad as : Athātah śauchā udgīthah. Taddha bako dālbyho glāvo vā maitreyah svādhyāyamudvavrāja.⁸ He is mentioned in Shadaviṁśa Brāhmaṇa as well.⁹

23. Maudgalya was the teacher of Glāva Maitreya. The pūrva bhāga of Gopatha Brāhmaṇa has the reference : Etaddha smaitadvidvānsa-mekādaśāksham maudgalyam glāvo maitreyo abhyājagām.¹⁰

It is written in Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa : Keśi ha dārbhyo dīkshito nishasāda.....¹ i.e., Keśi, son of Dārbha was ordained to perform a sacrifice. His mother was the sister of Uchchaisravā : Uchchaisravā ha kaupayeyahkauravyo rājā āsa. Tasya ha Keśi Dārbhya pāñchālō rājā svasrīya āsa.² Perhaps, the dynasty had come to an end with Keśi Dārbhya. The two readings Dārbhya and Dālbhya are on account of the regional difference in pronunciation.³

25. Keśi Sātyakāmi had given sermon to Keśi Dārbhya. A reference in Maitrāyaṇī - saṁhitā reads : Etaddha sma vā āha Keśi sātyakāmi Keśinam dārbhyam.⁴ In the Taittirīya - saṁhitā it is stated : keśinam ha dārbhya keśi sātyakāmīrūvācha.⁵ A similiar reading is available in Gopatha Brāhmaṇa.⁶

Somaśushma, mentioned at serial 3 above, was the son of Satyayajña Paulushi.

Buḍila Āśvatarāśvi had a debate with Janaka, mentioned at serial 1.¹ It is stated : Etaddha vai tajjanako vaidehah. Buḍilamāśvatarāśvimuvācha.²

Prāchīnaśāla Aupamanyava of Chhāndogyaopanishad is Mahāśāla Jābāla of Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. These two names are, perhaps, of one and the same person. It is also stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : Atha hovācha mahāśālam jābālam. Aupamanyava. The adjective, aupamanyava, is common to both the references and confirms that Prāchīnaśāla Aupamanyava is Mahāśāla Jābāla. The name Prāchīna-vogya mentioned in the Gopatha - Brāhmaṇa is of the same person.³

40.—41. Jīvala Kārīrādi and *Āshāḍa Sāvayasa*⁴ were the colleagues of Āruṇī and Indradyumna Bhāllaveya, as :

43.—44. Barku Vārshṇa and Priya Jānaśruteya were also contemporary to Āruṇī. It is mentioned in Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa :

It is clear that Uddālaka Āruṇī, Yājñavalkya Vājasaneyā, Barkuvārshṇa, Priya Jānaśruteya and Buḍila Āśvatarāśvi were all contemporary of King Janaka of Videha.

It has already been stated that Buḍila Āśvatarāśvi is mentioned in Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.² The reference from the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa makes him a contemporary of Āruṇī.

Many more names could be added to this list. All these āchāryas well versed in the Veda and embodiment of truth were contemporary of many kings. Pulusha, Ajātaśatru, Śatānīka had belonged to the first; Uddālaka, Satyayajña, Bhadrasena, Hāridrumata Gautama, Jivala, Darbha, Maudgalya, Yajñasena. Śaunaka Svaidāyana and Śaucheya Prāchīna Yogya to the second and the remaining kings and āchāryas had belonged to the third generation.

CHAPTER FIVE

PERIOD OF THEIR COMPILATION

The basic subject matter of the brāhmaṇas dates back to the hoary past. The known primordial exponent of the brāhmaṇas was Brahmā or Svayambhu Brahma according to the Vaṁśa-brāhmaṇas mentioned in the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*¹ and Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad.² The Prajāpati, Manu and other sages had propounded major portion of the brāhmaṇas. In the Chārāyaṇīya Mantrārshādhyāya it is stated : ādhānam brāhmaṇam prajāpateh. Ishtibrāhmaṇāni prajāpateh.³ Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā has another similar quotation: āpo vā idam niramṛjan. Sa manurevodaśishyata. Sa etāmishtimapaśyattāmaharattayāyajata...⁴ Taittirīya-saṁhitā has a similar reference.⁵ Many more sages have been expounding the subject matter now available in the various brāhmaṇas. Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Veda Vyāsa and his disciples had compiled the brāhmaṇas at the time of the Mahābhārata or at the end of the Dvāpara-yuga or the beginning of Kali-yuga. The Mahābhārata period, in general, denotes, a period of hundred years before and after the Mahābhārata war. Śaṅkara in his commentary on Brahma sūtra writes : Tathā hi—apāntaratamānāma vedāchāryah purāṇarshirvi-shṇuniyogātkalidvāparayoh saṁdhau kṛishṇa-dvaipāyanah sambabhū-veti smaranti,¹ i. e., the period of Kṛishṇa-Dvaipāyana Veda-Vyāsa is the conjunction of Dvāpara and Kali yugas.

A. Śatapatha and other brāhmaṇas mention the names of historical personages of a slightly earlier period than the Mahābhārata. It is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

- (a) Tena haitena bharato dauhshantirje.....Tadetad gāthayābhigītam—Ashṭāsaptatim bharato dauhshantiryamunāmanu,² gangāyām vṛitraghne abandhnāt panchapanchāśatam hayāniti.11.

The names of Daushyanti Bharata, Śatānika and Śakuntalā, mentioned in these gāthās, or yajña-gāthās,² are of those persons who had existed slightly earlier than Mahābhārata period. It is, therefore, apt to accept that Śatapatha and other brāhmaṇas were compiled later than these historical personages.

Contrarily, it could be stated that these names are not of historical persons but denote a metaphysical meaning through their derivative roots. Moreover, these are not proper nouns, but are common names of Dushyanta, Bharata etc., who had existed in various kalpas. These represent a class name in general like those of gau, aśva puruṣa, hasti etc. Mention of such names in the brāhmaṇas, as such, is not an evidence to prove, that the brāhmaṇa works were compiled during the Mahābhārata period.

On the other hand, it has to be stated that these gāthās or yajña-gāthās quoted above were sung by human beings. Corroborative evidence shall be discussed in a later chapter. The writings of the human beings cannot be compared to śruti and such a meaning is nothing but imagination. The saṁhitās cannot be equated with the works of the human beings.

Duhshyanta, Bharata and other words are not common nouns. Those who accept Viśvāmitra and other words as common names, admit their such mention only in the Vedas revealed to super-humans and not in brāhmaṇas.

Besides, the brāhmaṇas mention the names of a number of persons who had flourished a little earlier to the Mahābhārata period. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa mentions such names as :

- (i) Etena hendroto daivāpah śaunakah. Janamejayam Pārikshitam yājayām chakāra.....¹
- (ii) Tadetat gāthayābhigītam—
Āsandīvatī dhānyādādam rukmiṇam haritasrajam, abadhnādaśvam sāramgam devebhyo janamejaya. Iti. 13.5.4.2.1

Aitareya Brāhmaṇa has a similar reference :

- (i) Etena ha vā aindreṇa mahābhishekeṇa turah kāvasheyo² janamejayam³ pārikshitamabhishecha.....Tadeshābhi yajña-gāthāgīyate—
Āsandīvatī dhānyādādam rukmiṇam haritasrajam, aśvam babandha sāramgam devebhyo janamejaya. Iti. 8.21.4

Pārikshita Janamejaya mentioned here appears to have flourished earlier than his namesake who was the successor of the Pāṇḍavas. It is mentioned in chapter 146 of Śānti-parva of the Mahābhārata :

- (i) Atra te vartayishyāmi purāṇamṛishisamstutam,
Indrotah śaunako⁵ vipro yadāha janamejaya. 2.⁶

Here, Bhīṣma addressing Yudhisṭhira mentions king Parikshita Janamejaya, who, therefore would have flourished earlier to them. King Parikshita is mentioned in Atharva-veda.³ He is called Kauravya. Does this mean that Atharva-veda is posterior to the Mahābhārata? The name Parikshita is mentioned in the kuntāpa-sūktas. These sūktas do not form part of the main Atharva-veda-saṃhitā. Pada-pāṭha of these sūktas is also not available. These are treated as inter-polations in the anukramaṇikā. Mere mention of the word Parikshita in this sūkta does not imply that the saṃhitā was posterior to the Mahābhārata. On the other hand, the meaning of the word is samvatsara and agni. Similarly, a king is not mentioned in *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁴ and Gopatha Brāhmaṇa.⁵

Other evidence to prove that the brāhmaṇas were compiled during the Mahābhārata period is as follows :

- A. It is mentioned in chapter 57 of Ādi-parva of Mahābhārata, Brahmanā brāhmaṇānām cha tathānugrahakāmīkshayā, vivyāsa vedān yasmāt sa yasmādvvyāsa iti smṛitah. 73

Veda Vyāsa had four disciples, Sumantu, Jaimini, Vaiśampāyana and Paila. These four had a special study of the Vedas. It is mentioned in the Kāśikā : Vaiśampāyanāntevāsinah nava.....Charakah iti vaiśampāyanasyākhyā, tatsambandhena sarve tadantevāsinaścharakā ityuchyante.¹ Patañjali writes in his Mahābhāṣya : Vaiśampāyanāntevāsī kṛṣṇah. Kṛṣṇāntevāsī khādāyanah. Vaiśampāyanāntevāsī kalāpī.² Genealogy of the disciples is as follows :

According to Mahābhāṣya 1-3 are prāchya, 4-6 are udichya and 7-9 are Mādhyama.⁴ Hāridravīṇa,⁵ Taumburavīṇa and Āruṇīna are mentioned in Kāśikā.⁶ They were exponents of the brāhmaṇas as stated in the Mahābhāṣya.⁷ Since the available brāhmaṇas were expounded by Veda

3 Chhāndogyaopaniṣad published by S.K. Belvalkar in Four Unpublished Upanisadic Texts, 1925, appears to be of this ṛishi. A brāhmaṇa expounded by this ṛishi is mentioned by Pāṇini in the aphorism 4.3.109. A sūtra from Chhāgaleya-śrauta-sūtra is quoted in Śāmkhāyana-śrauta-bhāṣya 6.1.7. See p. 65 above.

6 4.3.104; Vāyu-purāṇa 60. 7-9, slightly differs.

Vyāsa and his disciples who had flourished during the Mahābhārata period, the period of the brāhmaṇas is also the same.

The Śānti-parva of the Mahābhārata has another evidence¹ :

Vivikte paravatataṭe pārāśaryo mahātapah, vedānadyāpayāmāsa vyāsah śishyān mahātapāh. 23.
Sumantum cha mahābhāgam vaiśampāyanameva cha, jaiminim cha mahāprājñam pailam chāpi tapasvinam. 27.

It is clear that Sumantu and others were the disciples of Pārāśarya Vyāsa. They all had expounded the brāhmaṇas towards the end of the Dvāpara-yuga.

B. Yājñavalkya had also belonged to the Mahābhārata period as evident from verses in the *Sabhā-parva*² :

Bako dālhbhyah sthūlaśirāh kṛṣṇadvaipāyanah śukah, sumanturjaiminīh pailo vyāsaśishyastathā vayam. 9.
Tittiriryājñavalkyaścha sasuto romaharshaṇah.

Baka Dālhbhya, Sthūlaśira, Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana, Śuka, Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Tittiri, Yājñavalkya were the gems of the court of king Yudhisṭhira. According to Jayāditya, Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa was expounded by Yājñavalkya.³ Here, Jayāditya differs with Patañjali,⁴ as he had some other ancient ākhyāna to depend upon. The sub-divisions of the brāhmaṇas were also called brāhmaṇas. Most of the minor brāhmaṇas in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa are very old and were expounded by Prajāpati and other sages. As compared to these, the brāhmaṇas expounded by Yājñavalkya are later. The ākhyāna does not refer to the complete Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, but to the sud-divisions. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa was expounded along with Bhāllavi, Śātyāyana and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas. Mahidāsa, the exponent of Aitareya Brāhmaṇa is slightly posterior to Sumantu and others. The same conclusion is deduced from Āśvalāyana-gṛihya-sūtra.¹ Yājñavalkya being their colleague, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa expounded by him belonged to the same period. Bulila Āsvatarāśvi a contemporary of Yājñavalkya is referred to in Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,² therefore, it is of the same period or a little later.

Yājñavalkya had a discussion with Daivarāti Janaka,³ who was also known as Daivarāti Bṛihadhratha Janaka.⁴ According to an opinion this Janaka had long preceded Sīradhvaja Janaka, father of Queen Sitā. Could it be that Daivarāti Janaka of Mahābhārata was different from his namesake mentioned in the Rāmāyaṇa? Daivarāti Janaka of the Mahābhārata had a discussion with Śuka. Bhīṣma had been apprised of the deductions of the discussion by Daivarāti himself.⁵

C. Internal evidence in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa substantiates that the brāhmaṇa was expounded during the Mahābhārata period :

(a) Atha pṛishadājyam tad u ha charakādhvaryavah pṛishadājyamevāgre abhidhārayanti prāṇah pṛishadājyamiti vadantastadu ha Yājñavalkyam charakādhvaryuranuvyājahāra.⁶

Charaka and charakādhvaryu mentioned in the above references are the disciples of Vaiśampāyana. Dr. Caland in his introduction to the Kāṇva Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has discussed in detail these references.⁷ A reference in the Vāyu-purāṇa further corroborates it : brahmahatyā tu yaishchīrṇā charaṇāchcharakāh smṛitāh. Vaiśampāyanaśishyāste charakāh samudāhṛitāh.⁸ Charaka-Vaiśampāyana belonged to the Mahābhārata period and a work referring to his disciples cannot be anterior to that period.

D. The memorable discussion between Yājñavalkya and other rishis in the court of king Janaka is narrated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁹ A question by Yājñavalkya could not be replied by one of the rishis named Vidagdha Śākalya,¹⁰ whose head, therefore, had fallen.¹¹ Śākalya was the famous āchārya of the Rigveda and foremost among the padakāras.¹ He was better known as Devamitra Śākalya. His discussion with Brahmavāhasuta Yājñavalkya² is also mentioned in the Vāyu-purāṇa,³ according to which the following genealogy of the teachers and the disciples is available :

Śākalya and others being the disciples of Paila all belonged to the Mahābhārata period. As he had a discussion with Yājñavalkya, the latter as well as the brāhmaṇa propounded by him belong to the same period.

E. Baka Dālbhya, Vichitravīrya and Dhṛitarāshṭra are mentioned in the Kāthaka-saṁhitā : Naimishyā vai satramāsata ta uthāya saptaviṁśatim kurupañchāleshu vatsatarānavanvata tānbako dālbhira-bravīdyūyamevaitān vibhajadhvamimamaham dhṛitarāshṭram vaichit-

Yayau rājanstatto rāmo bakasyāśramamantikāt, yatra tepe tapastivram dālbhyo baka iti śrutih.² 32.

i.e., O ! king, then Balarāma went near the hermitage of Baka. According to śruti, here, Dālbhya Baka had practised hard penance. In the same *parva*³ it is stated :

Yatra dālbhyo bako rājanpaśvarthe sumahātapāh, juhāva dhṛitarāshṭrasya rāshṭram kopasamanvitah.1.

Tānabravīdbako dālbhyo vibhajadvam paśūniti. 5.

Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā mentions Dhṛitarāshṭra, son of Vichitravīrya, of Mahābhārata fame. So the saṁhitā and the related brāhmaṇa were propounded during the same period. Baka Dālbhya was living when Yudhishṭhira was ruling.⁴ In the Vana-parva it is stated⁵ :

Athābravīdbako dālbhyo dharmarājam yudhishṭhiram, saṁdhyām kaunteyamāsinamṛishibhih parivāritam.5

The average life span of the ṛishis used to be from hundred to three or four hundred years.⁶ They were known as dirghajīvi according to Manusmṛiti : ṛishayo dirghasañdhyatvāt dirghamāyuravāpnuyuh.⁷ Baka Dālbhya who was living during the rule of Yudhishṭhira, also had discussion with his predecessor Dhṛitarāshṭra, son of Vichitravīrya.

His long narration in the Kāṭha-saṃhitā implies that the related brāhmaṇa was compiled during the Mahābhārata period. Most of the brāhmaṇas were compiled during the same period.

It has already been stated that Baka Dāl̥bhya was a contemporary of Yājñavalkya.¹

Life span was reduced to hundred years when Patañjali lived. He writes : kim punaradyatve yah sarvathā chiram jīvati sa varsha-śatam jīvati.² Kātyāyana also writes : sahasrasaṃvatsaramamanushy-āṇāmasaṃbhavāt³ and nādarśanāt.⁴

F. It is stated in Kāṭhak-saṃhitā that the son of Bhīmasena had addressed Divodāsa (Uddālaka) Āruṇī : divodāso bhaimasenir-āruṇimuvācha.⁵ Uddālaka was a colleague of Yājñavalkya and others. According to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, Divodāsa was the son of Bhīmasena who was a Pārikshit : ete aeva pūrve aahani..... Tena bhīmasenam.....tenograsenam.....tena śrutasenamityete pārikshitīyah,⁶ i. e., Bhīmasena, Ugrasena, and Śrutasena were Pārikshitas. They had preceded the Mahābhārata period by a generation. As such, the Kāṭhaka-saṃhitā and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa had been compiled during the Mahābhārata period or slightly later.

G. Āraṇyakas are either sub-divisions of the brāhmaṇas or form their part itself. Taittirīya Āraṇyaka is a compendium to the brāhmaṇa. Pārāśarya Vyāsa expresses an opinion on 1.9.2. Tittiri⁷ who propounded the āraṇyaka belonged to the Mahābhārata period.¹ These two evidences place the āraṇyaka and the brāhmaṇa in this period itself.

H. Jaimini had propounded the Jaiminiya-saṃhitā of the Sāmaveda. He was one of the disciples of Pārāśarya Vyāsa. Sāmavidhāna-Brāhmaṇa states : vyāsah pārāśaryo jaiminiye.² He was the first to be taught the recensions of the Sāmaveda by Vyāsa. He propounded the Talavakāra-Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇas. Being the disciple of Pārāśarya Vyāsa, he belongs to the Mahābhārata period. The brāhmaṇa propounded by him also belongs to the same period. Many proper names mentioned in this brāhmaṇa are of this period; these have been mentioned in the previous chapter.

Jaimini is the author of Mīmāṃsā-sūtras as well. The following verse connoting the past history is available in the beginning of most of the manuscripts of this brāhmaṇa :

Ujjahārāgamāmbhodheyo dharmāmṛitamañjasā, nyāyairnirmathya bhagavān sa prasādatu jaiminih³

Keith writes, 'A Jaimini is credited with the authorship of a Śrauta and Grhya Sūtra, and the name occurs in lists of doubtful authenticity in Āśvalāyana and Śāṅkhāyana Grhya Sūtras; a Jaiminiya Saṃhitā and a Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa of the Sāma Veda are extant.... ..It is then a plausible conclusion that the Mīmāṃsā Sūtra does not date after 200 A. D.; but that it is probably not much earlier.....'⁴

This view of Keith cannot be accepted, as the above quoted verse found in the beginning of most of the manuscripts of the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa represents the correct history and Jaimini, the exponent of the Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa and disciple of Veda Vyāsa had also composed the Mīmāṃsā-sūtras. Since Keith accepted the composition of mīmāṃsā-sūtras in 200 A. D., he is unable to reconcile to the correct view.

Further, mīmāṃsā sūtras had been known long before the beginning of the Christian era. Keith accepts that Upa-varsha had is commentary on these sūtras. His basis is the commentary by Śaṅkara on Vedānta-sūtras.¹ Besides Śaṅkara, Keśava, follower of the Atharvaveda remembers Upa-varsha, commentator on mīmāṃsā-sūtras, in the Kaūśika-sūtra, as : Upavarshāchāryeṇoktam. Mīmāṃsā-yām smṛtipāde kalpasūtrādhikaraṇeiti bhagavānupavarshāchāryeṇa pratipāditam.² Bhāskara quotes Upa-varsha in his commentary on Vedānta-sūtra 1. 1. 1. The commentary by Upa-varsha is mentioned by Sāyaṇa in his bhāṣya on the Rigveda.³ Upa-varsha had preceded Pāṇini. According to Kathā-sarīt-sāgara, both had the same guru. Rājaśekhara writes in his Kāvya-mīmāṃsā :

Śrūyate cha pāṭaliputre Śāstrakāra parīkṣa—
Atropavarshavarshāviha pāṇinipimṅgalāviha vyāḍih,

A chronological description of the great authors is available in this verse. In the ascending order these are Patañjali, Vararuchi, Pimṅgala,⁵ Pāṇini, Varsha and Upa-Varsha.

Nāgesa-bhaṭṭa in his Siddhānta-laghu-maṇjūshā commenting on a Sāṃkhya-aphorism : *pratītyapratītibhyām na sphoṭātmakah śabda iti*⁶ writes ; iti sāmkyoktam tadanusāryupavarshoktam cha sphoṭakhaṇḍanamapāstam.¹ Upa-varsha is quoted in Nyāya-mañjarī as : tatra pratyakshamātmānamaupavarshāḥ prapedire.² Vīramitro-daya writes in his Samskāra-prakāśa.

Dvididhānapi gargānstān upavarsho mahāmuniḥ, anukramya tva vai vāhyān bharadvājatayā jagau.³

Ātmānanda in his commentary on Asyavāmīya-sūkta quotes a verse from Upa-varsha as : Āha chopavarshah—

Bodhyāntarātye vāchām mahātātparyamuchyate, anyārthamuchyate anyachchet tadavāntarāśābhitam.⁴

Upa-varsha is also mentioned in Gotra-pravara-mañjarī. The commentator being of an early date, the original aphorisms ought to be still more earlier. Pāṇini is to be placed almost two centuries after the beginning of the Kali-yuga. Some of the modern scholars accept his date as fifth century before the Christian era.⁵ This has to be the date of the sūtras, as well. Keṭh as such has no locus standi.

Jaimini, the disciple of Vyāsa and author of mīmāṃsā-sūtras was the exponent of Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa. As such, the brāhmaṇa belongs to the Mahābhārata period.

I. Chhāndogyaopanishad forms the final portion of the Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa. It is stated in the Upanishad : Etaddha sma vai tadvidvānāha mahidāsa aitareyah. Sa ha shoḍaśam varshaśatamajivat.⁶ Mahidāsa Aitareya was the exponent of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. He is mentioned in *Āśvalāyana-gṛihya-sūtra*⁷ and Jaiminiya-upanishad-brāhmaṇa.⁸ He is in between Vyāsa vnd Śaunaka and Āśvalāyana. Śaunaka was the exponent of a recension and a brāhmaṇa according to the aphorism of Pāṇini : Śaunakādibhyaśchhandasi.¹ Possibly, this recension was related to the Atharva-veda. Āśvalāyana, the disciple of Śaunaka had mainly followed the Rigveda. Śaunaka himself was the author of many works on the Rigveda. These āchāryas were not confined to a particular recension. Kātyāyana, another disciple of Śaunaka, had written on all the four Vedas. Śaunaka having expounded a recension of the Atharva-veda, as such, has not to be doubted. Āśvalāyana was disciple of this Śaunaka according to the introduction to the Sarvānukramaṇi-vṛitti by Shaḍguruśishya: Śaunakasya tu śishyo abhūta bhagavānāśvalāyanah.² For this very reason Āśvalāyana writes at the end of his Śrauta-sūtra and Gṛhya-sūtra: namah Śaunakāya. Namah Śaunakāya.³ Having expounded a recension Śaunaka is very near to Vyāsa. Mahidāsa Aitareya is also very close to Kṛishṇa-Davipāyana-Vyāsa. Therefore, the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa expounded by him is of the Mahābhārata period. Chhāndogya-upanishad and brāhmaṇa mentioning him, also, belong to the Mahābhārata period. Probably, the upanishad portion is slightly later, and Mahidāsa Aitareya had died by that time. Possibly, Mahidāsa had a shorter life as compared to other rishis. A reference in the Jaiminiya-upanishad-brāhmaṇa has the same conclusion: Etaddha tadvidvān brāhmaṇa uvācha mahidāsa aitareyah.... Sa ha shoḍaśaśatam varshāṇi jijīva.⁴ Aitareya Āraṇyaka is the closing portion of the brāhmaṇa. Mahidāsa is mentioned in it also : Etaddha sma vai tadvidvānāha mahidāsa aitareyah.⁵ Keith writes on it : 'This mention is enough to prove that Mahidāsa did not write the Āraṇyaka. But it is quite probable that he was the redactor of the Brāhmaṇa, in its form of forty chapters.'⁶

6 Note 2, p. 210

Mere mention of the name cannot exclude Mahidāsa from being the exponent. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa was expounded by Yājñavalkya and his name is often mentioned in the brāhmaṇa as : tadu hovācha yājñavalkyah;¹ iti ha smāha yājñavalkyah² and sa hovācha yājñavalkyah.³

A few scholars express that Mahidāsa had lived for 1600 years, instead of 116 years. Medhātithi in his commentary on Manusmṛiti writes: nanu 'sa ha shoḍaśam varshaśatamajīvat' iti paramamāyurvede śrūyate.⁴ Ganganath Jha in his English translation expresses, 'But we find the highest age described as 1600 years, in the Chhāndogya Upanishad (3.16.7) where it is said he lived for sixteen hundred years.' Rajendralal Mitra has the same opinion. The ancient āchāryas have translated it as: Shoḍaśottaravarshaśatam—Śaṅkara;⁵ shodashādhikam varshaśatam—*Rāmānuja*⁶ and shoḍaśottaram śatam—Madhva.⁷

Purusha has been compared with savanas in this reference from the Upanishad. The total years of the three savans is 24+44+48=116 years. The figure 1600 years does not fit with reference to the context. Max Mueller and Hans Oertel accept the meaning as 116 years. Jha has, else where, translated *eka śatamadhvaryunāma*⁸ mentioned by Medhātithi as 'a hundred recensions,' which again is incorrect, as in literature it means 101 only.

An interesting difficulty arises in the translation of the phrase vayam used at the end against serial 45 in the genealogy of forty five āchāryas who had succeeded Yājñavalkya; it is mentioned at the end of the Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. Against serial number 45, no name is mentioned; instead the phrase vayam is used. Could it mean that the expositions by Yājñavalkya were added by a large number of his disciples?

7 षोडशोत्तरं शतम्—मध्व

At times plural is also used for a single person. In Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, Janaka addresses : sahasram bho yājñavalkya dadymo yasminvayam tvayi mitravindāmavavidāmeti.¹ Janaka uses the plural for himself, here. This brāhmaṇa has another reference: sabandhuh śunāsīryasya yam pūrvamavochām.² The meaning of the phrase avochām has a similar implication. Vayam referred to the disciples who had added to the brāhmaṇa. They lived two or three hundred years after the Mahābhārata period. The additions to a brāhmaṇa by the later disciples or the āchāryas, at times, create difficulty in fixing the period of the brāhmaṇas. Similarly, references to the age of Mahidāsa could be inter-polation.

Śaṅkara writes about this genealogy, at the end of his commentary on Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad : athedānīm samastapra-chanavamśah.³ Dvivedaganga in his commentary on Mādhyandina-Āranyaka writes : ayam vamśah samastasyaiva pravachanasya bhavati na vyavahitakhilakāṇḍasya.⁴ These references are in contradiction of the vast literature wherein Yājñavalkya has been accepted as the exponent of the brāhmaṇa. Vayam does not appear to refer to all the āchāryas as having propounded the brāhmaṇa, but to those āchāryas only who had added to the existing brāhmaṇa and their additions have to be treated as inter-polations. In fact, the genealogy itself is an interpolation.

(J) Another genealogy in the *Sāma-vidhāna-brāhmaṇa*⁵ reads :

1 Prajāpati

Tāmḍi and Śātyāyani had succeeded Pārāśarya Vyāsa, therefore, as exponents of Tāmḍya and Śātyāyana Brāhmaṇas, they belong to the Mahābhārata period. Śatapatha has an apt reference : atha ha smāha tāmḍyah.¹

(K) According to Abhaya Kumar Guha, Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Veda Vyāsa, and Bādarāyaṇa are one and the same person. The last work by Veda Vyāsa, the Vedānta-sūtras, refer to mantra-saṁhitās, brāhmaṇas, āraṇyakas and the upanishads as :

These aphorisms refer to śurtis from Chhāndogyopanishad, Kāṇva and Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇas, Jābāla Upanishad, Kaushītaki Upanishad, Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad, Rahasya Brāhmaṇas of Tāmṇi and Paimiṅgi, and Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā respectively.

The brāhmaṇas were compiled by the disciples of Veda Vyāsa and reference to them in a work by Veda Vyāsa himself implies that the compilation of the brāhmaṇas had been completed during the life time of Veda Vyāsa himself or during the Mahābhārata period itself.

The Vedānta-sūtras refer to Manusmṛiti.⁴ Could it mean that these sutras are of a much later date? It appears that the original sūtras are by Veda Vyāsa himself, whereas later additions have also been made to them.

(L) A verse in the Ādi-parva of the *Mahābhārata*⁵ refers to Devāpi, Śantanu and Bāhlika, the three sons of Pratīpa by his wife Sunandī from Śibi country :

Pratīpastu khalu śaivyāmupayeme sunandīm nāma.

Devāpim śantanum bāhlikam cheti. 47

Bāhlika, son of Pratīpa, is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa; tadu ha bahlikah prātipīyah śuśrāva kauravyo rāja. Bāhlika⁶ and Śantanu¹, as sons of Pratīpa are mentioned in the Udyoga-parva also. Bāhlika is of the Mahābhārata period and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa which also mentions him, is, therefore, of the same period.

In the Rāmāyaṇa Kaṭha, Kālāpa and Taittirīya are mentioned.² The verses in the edition of the Rāmāyaṇa by Sātavalekara appear to be inter-polations as these do not appear in the more authentic and critical editions of the Bengal³ and North-western recensions.⁴ The reading taittirīyānām in all the editions must also be an inter-polation. Tittiri is a disciple of Vaiśampāyana as stated above; they belonged to the Mahābhārata period. It is mentioned in the Kāṇḍānukramaṇikā: vaiśampāyano yāskāyaitām prāha pairṅgye. Yāskastittiraye prāha ukhāya prāha tittirih.⁵

The following verse in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is further helpful in determining the period of the brāhmaṇas:

Etā (krittikāḥ) ha vai prāchyai diśo na chyavante, sarvāṇi ha vā aanyāni nakshatrāṇi prāchyai diśaśchyavante.⁶

Śaṅkara Bālakṛishṇa Dīkshit has discussed that at particular movement except krittikā planet all the other planets move in the prāchī direction. This had happened even 3000 years before Vikrama. Śatapatha and the other brāhmaṇas refer to this event; therefore, the brāhmaṇas are that much old. The brāhmaṇas have many more similar readings which analysed astronomically lead to the same conclusion.

Brāhmaṇas are considered to be contemporaneous with the Vedas. These have been expounded from the earliest times: their present form had taken shape during the Mahābhārata period when these were compiled.

CHAPTER SIX

LITERATURE ANTERIOR TO THE BRĀHMAṆAS

Indian literature and culture in its vivid form is best represented in its available works. Presistent efforts of the past two centuries have helped to preserve their small portion. Even if the works in original have been lost, references to them in literature are available. An exhaustive survey of this vast literature is a desideratum.

Before the Mahābhārata period, the brāhmaṇas had continued to be expounded; besides, the āchāryas had been compiling literature on varied subjects. Vātsyāyana commenting on Nyāya-sūtra 4.1.62, quotes the following from a lost brāhmaṇa:

Pramāṇena khalu brāhmaṇetiḥāsapurāṇasya prāmāṇyamabhyanuñāyate. Te vā khalvete atharvāṅgirasa etaditihāsapurāṇamabhyavadan.....ya eva mantra-brāhmaṇasya drashtārah pravaktāraścha te khalvitihāsapurāṇasya dharmasāstra-sya cheti.¹

The brāhmaṇas help in establishing the authenticity of the puarāṇas and itihāsa or history. They were the atharvāṅgirasa who had spoken about purāṇa and itihāsa. To whom the hymns and the brāhmaṇas were revealed are also the authors of purāṇa, itihāsa and dharma-śāstra. He again comments on sūtra 2.2.67: ya evāptā vedārthā-nām drashtārah pravaktāraścha te evāyurvedaprabhṛitīnāmīti.¹

A lost brāhmaṇa and the above comments of Vātsyāyana help us to know that long before the Mahābhārata period when atharvā-ṅgīrasa sages and sages to whom the hymns and their meanings have been revealed had flourished, the following literature in the spoken language of the people was available to them :

- 1 Itihāsa.
- 2 Purāṇa—works, detailing the creation of the universe.
- 3 Dharmaśāstra—works by Manu and others.
- 4 Āyurveda—science of medicine.

A reference in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa helps to know more about literature: Yadanuśāsanaṇi vidyā vākovākyamitihāsapurāṇam gāthā nārāśamsyah,² i. e.,

- 5 Anuśāsna—grantha.
- 6 Vākovākya—grantha.
- 7 Gāthā—grantha.
- 8 Nārāśamsi—grantha

Another reference in the same brāhmaṇa is : itihāsah purāṇam vidyā upanishadah ślokaḥ sūtrāṇyanuvyākhyānāni vyākhyānāni,³ i. e.,

- 9 Upanishad.
- 10 Śloka—grantha.
- 11 Sūtra—grantha⁴.

It is not that the Rāmāyaṇa did not have inter-polations. This śloka being not available in the Bengal and North-western recensions has to be accepted as an interpolation. See Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa, sarga, 118 and 122. Similarly, he writes on p. 11 about Janamejaya depending on the śloka: yām gatim sagarah śaivyo dilīpo janamejayah, (11.64.42). This verse is also not available in the other two recensions. See Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa, sargas 66 and 70.

the brāhmaṇas being very close to that of the Vedas is considered to imply that there were not any works in the spoken language of the common people. Philological deductions of these scholars based on incomplete and biassed studies had led to such erroneous ideas. On the other hand even the brāhmaṇas contain gāthās and ślokas which clearly are in the language of the people, e. g.,

Tadesha śloko abhyuktah—

Tadvai sa prāṇo abhavan mahābhūtvā prajāpatih

Tadesha śloko bhavati—

Many more similar ślokas are available in the Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa, 10.5.2.18; 10.5.4.16; 11.3.1.5-6; 11.5.4.12; 12.3.2.7-8 etc. The thirteenth and fourteenth kāṇḍas of this brāhmaṇa contain a large number of such ślokas. Similar gāthās and ślokas are available in the other brāhmaṇas. These are all in the language of the common man. Bārhaspatya Arthaśāstra and other similar works were in the same language. Quotations from this Arthaśāstra are available in the Bālakṛīdā commentary by Viśvarūpāchārya on Yājñavalkyasmṛiti. The Vedic language and the language of the common man have been in existence simultaneously. An unbiassed thinking is always the need.

hymns of the four Vedas and their explanations in the brāhmaṇas as the Veda itself. During the past almost 3,000 years not a single āchārya had expressed any doubt that the brāhmaṇas are not the Vedas. The brāhmaṇas have been throughout respected as the Veda itself. The rituals have been performed considering the brāhmaṇas as equal to the Vedas.

In the nineteenth century, Svāmi Dayānanda Sarasvatī expressed that the brāhmaṇas are not the Veda itself. These were not revealed but expressed by the seers. He advanced sufficient reasons to establish his view-point. A critical study, of the two views, based on facts helps to refute the persistent belief of these famous āchāryas and also understand the basis of their belief.

A. It is stated in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa:¹

Evamime sarve vedā nirmītāḥ sakalpāḥ sarahasyāḥ sabrāhmaṇaḥ sopani-shatkāḥ² setihāsāḥ sānvākhyānāḥ sapurāṇāḥ sasvarāḥ sasamskārah saniruktah sānuśasanāḥ sānumārjanāḥ savākovākyaḥ.³

Here, the brāhmaṇa itself states that kalpa, rahasya, brāhmaṇa, upanishad, itihāsa, anvākhyāna, purāṇa, svara works,⁴ samskāra works⁵ nirukta, anuśāsana, anumārjana and vākovākya do not form a part of the Veda. These were prepared to understand the meaning of the Veda. The brāhmaṇas do not consider themselves as the Veda; there is no cogent reason for the successive generations to accept them as such.

B. In contradiction of this view of Medhātithi, it is stated in Manusmṛiti :

1 एवमिमे सर्वे वेदा निर्मिताः सकल्पाः सरहस्याः सत्राह्वणाः सोपनिषत्काः सेतिहासाः सान्वाख्यानाः सपुराणाः सस्वराः ससंस्काराः सनिरुक्ताः सानुशासनाः सानुमार्जनाः सवाकोवाक्याः, 2.10, pūrva-bhāga.

2 At a certain period, rahasya, i.e., āraṇyakas and upanishads were not a part of the brāhmaṇas.

- (1) Upanīya tu yah śiṣhyam vedamadyāpayed dvijah, sakalpam sarahasyam cha tamāchāryam prachakshate.¹ 2.140
- (2) Rahasyāni sāmānyāranyakādhītāni.² 11.261

The phrase rahasya refers to āranyaka and upanishad. Maskarī writes : rahasyam āraṇye paṭhitavyo grantho yah tam.³ Durgāchārya writes : vijñāyate hī rahasyabrāhmaṇe—ya evam sūryah.⁴ This reading is from Aitareya Āraṇyaka 2.2.4. Here, Rahasya Brāhmaṇa refers to an āranyaka. Durgāchārya further elucidates it : aitareyakam rahasya-brāhmaṇe.⁵ The Dharma-sūtras had considered āranyakas as an integral part of the brāhmaṇas. A quotation—iti brāhmaṇam—is from Taittirīya-Āraṇyaka 2.7.5 as referred to in Baudhāyana-dharma-sūtra, 3.7.7. 16. Devapāla in his commentary on Kāṭhaka-grihya-sūtra writes : upanishadam rahasyaśāstram.⁶ Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara quotes Taittirīya Āraṇyaka 1.32 as brāhmaṇam cha bhavati.⁷

Āraṇyakas and upanishads from part of the brāhmaṇas and Manu refers to them as separate from the Veda itself. He does not accept the brāhmaṇas as the Veda.

Manu, having vast knowledge of the Vedas and as a great āchārya had never accepted the brāhmaṇas as the Veda but Medhātithi and other commentators on his great work Manusmṛiti had only given vent to their imagination.

- (3) Manusmṛiti refers to respectable persons as :⁸

i. e., those who are foremost in the study of the Veda and the propounded works are respectable. The word pravachana used here means a brāhmaṇa as already discussed earlier.¹ The exponents of the brāhmaṇas, as stated in the *Gopatha Brāhmaṇa*² never accepted them as the Veda. Manu and others considered āraṇyakas as separate from the Veda. The succeeding āchāryas conformed to this view-point. Sāyaṇa himself accepts in his introduction to his commentary on the Rigveda that one of the āraṇyakas was propounded by a ṛishi and it was never revealed : uktam cha śaunakena. Surūpakṛitnumutaya iti.....³ Aitareya Āraṇyaka refers to it.⁴ Even during the period of Sāyaṇa, the āraṇyakas had not attained the eminence of the Veda.

Manu however, refers to *upanishadī śruti*⁵ and further states : śrutistu vedo vijñeyo dharmasāstram tu vai smṛtiḥ.⁶ The word śruti and Veda have been used as antonyms of smṛti. Smṛti is relegated a lower position as compared to the brāhmaṇas, upanishads etc. Being the explanation of the Veda itself these are known as Veda or śruti. Upanishads are delegated a still inferior position being designated as upanishadī śruti. Śruti does not always mean the Veda. In the Mahābhārata and other works common history relevant to the brāhmaṇas is called śruti, as : yatra tepe tapastivram dālbhyo baka iti śrutih.⁷ Manu himself regards upanishadī śruti as separate from vaidikī-śruti. It is written in the Manusmṛiti : rājñaścha dadyuruddhāratityeshā vaidikī śrutih.⁸

- (b) Bahvīnāmekapatnīnāmekā putravatī yadi, sarvāstāstena putreṇa putravantya iti śrutih.¹ 17.11

The word śruti is used in Buddha-charita, as well. In the Kishki-ndhā-kāṇḍa of the southern recension of the Vālmīkiya Rāmāyaṇa it is stated : aham tāmānayishyāmi naśtām vedaśrutīmiva.² The distinctive use of the phrase vedaśruti implies that other śrutis like upanishad-śruti and tāntrik-śruti were, as well, known.

The use of the phrase anta in the following verse of the Manu-smṛiti means near only :

Daśalakṣhaṇakam dharmamanutishṭhan samāhitah, vedāntam vidhivat śrutvā saṁnyasedaṇṇiṇo dvijah.³ 6.94

Here, it does not refer to the upanishads.

C. Patañjali explicitly writes : saptadvīpā vasumatī trayo lokāḥ. Chatvāro vedāḥ sāṁgā sarahasyāḥ.⁴ According to Patañjali rahasya or the upanishads are separate from the Vedas. If the upanishads, which form a part of the brāhmaṇas, are separate from the Vedas the brāhmaṇas themselves cannot be Vedas.

Some of the scholars depending on the following references in the Mahābhāshya consider the brāhmaṇas as the Vedas :

(1) Vede khalvapi—‘Payovrato brāhmṇāo yavāgūvrato rājanya āmik-shāvrato vaiśyah’ ityuchyate.⁵

(2) Tathā—“Bailvah khādiro vā yūpah syāt” ityuchyate.⁶

5 वेदे खल्वपि —“पयोव्रतो ब्राह्मणो यवागूव्रतो राजन्य आमिक्षाव्रतो वैश्यः” इत्युच्यते, 1.1.1, p. 8, ibid

6 तथा—“बैल्वः खादिरो वा यूपः स्यात्” इत्युच्यते, 1.1.1, ibid. It seems to have been taken from Devapāla's commentary on Kāthaka-grihya-sūtra, 4.18 which reads: ब्राह्मणं च । बैल्वो वा खादिरो वा.....यूपः स्यात्.....इति श्रुतेः ।

- (3) Vedaśabdā apyevamabhivadanti—

Yo agnīṣṭomena jayate ya u chainamevam veda,
Yo agnim nāchiketam chinute ya u chainamevam veda.¹

- (4) Vede api—Ya evam viśvasṛjah sattrānyadhyāsta iti teshāmanukurvanstadvat sattrānyadhyāsita so apyabhyudayena yujyate.²

These references are available in the brāhmaṇas. Therefore, in the Mahābhāshya and in the vārttikas of the Mahābhāshya, Patañjali and Kātyāyana, accept the brāhmaṇas as the Vedas.

In contradiction, it has to be stated that the language of the brāhmaṇas is neither similar to those of the hymns, nor to that of the common people. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara explicitly states : brāhmaṇam nāma karmanastanmantrāṇāṃ cha vyākhyānagranthah.³ Sāyaṇa writes in the beginning of his commentary on Kāṇva-sāṃhitā :

Tatra śatapathabrāhmaṇasya mantravyākhyānarūpatvād vyākhyeyamantrapratipādakah sāmhitāgranthah pūrvābhāvitvāt prathamō bhavati.⁴

He also writes in his commentary on Taittirīya-sāṃhitā :

Yadyapi mantrabrāhmaṇātmako vedastathāpi brāhmaṇasya mantravyākhyānarūpatvānmantrā evādaṁ samāmnātāh.⁵

He is of the opinion that being the explanation of the Veda and being in the language of pravachana these are considered to be very near the Veda. Even to-day the Kalpa-sutras are considered to be Vedic but not the Veda itself as revealed by the God. Similarly, the scholars enumerated above had considered ceremoniously the brāhmaṇas as Vedic or the Veda itself. Patañjali implies the same sense in the above referred to quotations. Patañjali has a reference from Kātyāyana : yathā laukikavaidikesu.¹ In the continued strain, he quotes from the brāhmaṇas. This is evident from other similar references from Mahābhāṣya.

1 वेदशब्दा अप्येवमभिवदन्ति—

योऽग्निष्टोमेन यजते य उ चैनमेवं वेद । योऽग्निं नाचिकेतं चिनुते य उ चैनमेवं वेद, p. 10, ibid,

D. It is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa :

Omityṛichah pratigara evam tatheti gāthāyāh. Omiti vai devam, tatheti mānusham.²

A similar expression is available in the śrauta sūtras. Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra states :

Omityṛichah pratigara evam tatheti gāthāyāh. Omiti vai daivam tatheti mānusham.³

Quoting many gāthās, it is also mentioned in Śāṅkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra :

Tadetachchhaunahśepamākhyānam parah śatarggāthamaparimitas... Hiranyakaśipāvāsīnah pratigriṇāti omityṛichah pratigarah. Evam tathetigāthāyāh. Omiti vai daivam tatheti mānusham.⁴

Kātyāyana-śrauta-sūtra has another reference :

Śaunahśepamcha preshyati and Omityṛichām pratigarastatheti gāthānām.⁵

Āpastamba-śrauta-sūtra 18.19, has the references :

Kāṭhaka-saṃhitā clearly states : anṛitam hi gāthānṛitam nārāśaṃsih.³ It is also stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : anṛitam manushyāh.⁴ The poetical narrations and eulogies were never respected much. Maitrāyaṇī-saṃhitā expresses : yo gāthā nārāśaṃsibh-yām sanoti na tasya pratigrihyam. Anṛitena hi sa tatsanoti,⁵ i. e., nothing should be taken from him who worships chanting gāthā and nārāśaṃsi, as it is an impious worship. Mention of gāthā as an antonym of richā clarifies that the former is expressed by human beings and the latter revealed by the God. The gāthās which are in the language of the common man are often quoted in the brāhmaṇas, therefore these are not revealed by the God but expounded by man. So the brāhmaṇas are not the Vedas. If the brāhmaṇas are accepted as the Vedas the impious gāthās quoted in them will have to be accepted as revealed by God. This is against the evidence in the brāhmaṇas themselves.

E. It is mentioned in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa : yad brahmaṇah śamalamāsīt sā gāthā nārāśaṃsyabhavat,⁶ i. e., the impiety of the brāhmaṇa is gāthā and nārāśaṃsi. These two are not accepted as equal to the Veda.

F. In the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka and Āśvalāyana-grihya-sūtra, it is respectively stated as :

(a) Brāhmaṇānīti hāsān purāṇāni kalpān gāthā nārāśaṃsih.⁷

(b) Yad brāhmaṇāni kalpān gāthā nārāśaṃsīritihāsapurāṇānīti.⁸

ARE BRĀHMAṆAS THE VEDAS

Itihāsa, purāṇa, kalpa, gāthā and nārāśaṃsī are the adjectives of a brāhmaṇa. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra considers gāthā, itihāsa and purākalpa as a brāhmaṇa. It is mentioned in the commentary on Taittirīya-saṃhitā : Gāthā itihāsāḥ purākalpaścha brāhmaṇānyeva..... Sarvāṇyetāni brāhmaṇānyuchyante.¹ The brāhmaṇas are a collection of old history, purāṇa or the narration of the creation of the universe, kalpa, gāthā and eulogies expressed by man.

It is expressed in the Nirukta that the Vedas also have gāthās and itihāsa : tatra brahmetihāsamiśramṛiṇmiśram gāthāmiśram bhavati,² i.e. the Vedas as such are also composed by men and there is no difference between a Veda and a brāhmaṇa. This is not the correct interpretation of the reference from the Nirukta. The phrase tatra here, refers to the phrase in the sūkta of the preceding sentence. The correct interpretation is that in the sūkta 1.105.8 of the Rigveda there are hymns in the Veda which express the eternal history and there are hymns which are designated as gāthā, as certain facts are allegorically stated as a gāthā in them.

Do gāthās have a dual meaning both related to the universe or to the ṛichās in the Vedas ? A śloka or a verse is used for an ordinary verse and also for the Vedic hymns. Similar is the use of gāthā. The following verse from the Yajurveda is called a śloka in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa:

Andhantamah praviśanti ye asambhūtimupāsate, tato bhūya iva te tamo ya u sambhūtyāṃ ratāḥ.³

Besides the references in the brāhmaṇas to the gāthās, many more writers have expressed in the same strain:

(a) Āchārya Viśvarūpa in his commentary on verse 1.45 of Yājñavalkya-smṛiti writes:

1 गाथा इतिहासाः पुराकल्पश्च ब्राह्मणान्येव ।.....। सर्वाण्येतानि ब्राह्मणान्युच्यन्ते, 1.7.1

2 तत्र ब्रह्मेतिहासमिश्रमृद्धमिश्रं गाथामिश्रं भवति, 4.6

3 अन्धन्तमः प्रविशन्ति ये ऽसम्भूतिमुपासते । ततो भूय इव ते तमो य उ सम्भूत्यां रताः ॥ 40.9

Nārāśaṁsyah paurusheygo yajña-gāthāh. Gāthā ātmavādaślokaḥ. Purushakṛitā eva yajñagāthā ityanye.¹

(b) Medhātithi in his commentary on verse 9.42 of Manusmṛiti writes:

gāthāśabdo vṛttaviśeshavachanah.....paramparāgatā ślokaḥ.²

(c) In chapter 25 of Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa of North-western recension of the Rāmāyaṇa, it is mentioned :³

Api cheyam purāgītā gāthā sarvatra viśrutā, manunā mānavendreṇa tām śrutvā me vachah kuru. 11.
Gurorpyavaliptasya kāryākāryamajānatah.
kāmachārapravṛttasya na kārya bruvato vachah. 12.

In the Panchatantra by Pūrṇa Bhadra, the second verse above has a slightly variant reading :

Gurorapyavaliptasya kāryākāryamajānatah,
utpathapratipannasya daṇḍo bhavati śāsanam.⁴ 1.169.

In the Ādi-parva of the Mahābhārata, the same śloka is repeated as :

Gurorapyavaliptasya kāryākāryamajānatah,
utpathapratipannasya nyāyyam bhavati śāsanam.⁵ 64

Medhātithi has the following reading of this verse, from some source, in his commentary on 9.64 of Manusmṛiti :

Gurorapyavaliptasya kāryākāryamajānatah,
utpathapratipannasya parityāgo vidhiyate.⁶

Lakshmidhara in Śrāddha-kāṇḍa, mentions it amongst the verses from Hārta.⁷

ARE BRĀHMAṆAS THE VEDAS

133

Verse 1.131 of Tantrākhyāyikā has a close resemblance.¹

It is stated in verses 5 to 6 of chapter 57 of the Śānti-parva of the Mahābhārata that this verse was sung by king Maruta.

(d) A few gāthās are mentioned in chapter 31 of Āśvamedhika-parva of the Mahābhārata:²

Atra gāthāḥ kīrtayanti purākālpavido janah, ambarīṣeṇa yā gītā rājñā rājyam praśāsata. 4.
Samudīrṇeṣhu doṣeṣhu vadhyamāneṣhu sādhuṣhu, jagrāha tarasā rājyamambarīṣa iti śrutih.³ 5.

Ślokas composed by ordinary man were also called gāthās. Kāṭhaka-grīhya-sūtra 25.23 and Pāraskara-grīhya-sūtra 1.7.2, name the hymns as gāthās. The kuntāpa-ṛichās of Atharva-veda 20.128.120 are named as gāthās in Aitareya Brāhmaṇa 6.32.

Nārāyaṇa in his commentary on Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra accepts all the ṛichās as gāthās. He comments on a yajña-gāthā as: gāthāsabdena brāhmaṇagatā ṛicha uchyante, yajñārthā gāthā yajñagāthāḥ.⁴ In his commentary on 3.3.1 of Āśvalāyana-grīhya-sūtra, he states: gāthā nāma ṛigviśeshāḥ.⁵ This mistake of Nārāyaṇa is repeated by Sāyaṇa in his commentary on 2.9 of Taittirīya Āraṇyaka. He writes: gāthāḥ mantraviśeshāḥ.⁶ Stating yad brāhmaṇāni,⁷ he considers itihāsa and gāthā etc. as their adjective. This has a reference to gāthās composed by ordinary people. In contradiction, it has to be stated that the brāhmaṇa itself accepts these gāthās as composed by ordinary people, therefore, the reference of Nārāyaṇa is of no importance.

6 गाथाः मन्त्रविशेषाः, 2.9.

7 यद् ब्राह्मणानि ।

The use of yad needs further clarification. It has been used with all the four Vedas in Āśvalāyana-grīhya-sūtra. Similarly, it is used with brāhmaṇāni. It is not used with itihāsa etc. The sūtrakāra had considered itihāsa as the name of the facts mentioned in the brāhmaṇas. Here, itihāsa is not considered as independent but as part of brāhmaṇas.

The brāhmaṇas had definitely contained history of the sages and others as stated above. Some of the other examples are:

(a) Atha ha yājñavalkyasya dve bhārye babhūvatuh. Maitreyī cha Kātyāyani cha.¹

(b) Tasya ha nachiketā nāma putra āsa.²

These refer to positive history. The brāhmaṇas could, therefore, be called as works on history as well.

It is contented that the hymns also have itihāsa. In the Nirukta it is stated: *tatreitihāsamāchakshate*³ and ityaitihāsikāh.⁴ These refer to eternal history, in general, but not to any particular event of history. Jaimini has stated- param tu śrutiśāmānyamātram,⁵ i.e., all the names in the hymns are in general and do not refer to any particular event or person. In the brāhmaṇas, to explain the substance of the hymns, historical events are mentioned as an illustration. The commentators of the mediaeval period could not grasp the true sense; their interpretation of the Veda as such is defective. The meanings of hymns are yaugika and yoga-rūḍha. The brāhmaṇas contain history. Genealogies of the ṛishis are mentioned in them. These contain the life and events of the son, the grandson and the great-grandsons, as well. A vaṁśa forms an integral part of a purāṇa. These vaṁśas are often found in the brāhmaṇas. Another adjective of the brāhmaṇas is, therefore, purāṇa also. The brāhmaṇas though called as itihāsa are not called the Veda itself.

G. Many more references to the same effect are available. Gautama has stated: stutirnindā parakṛitih purākalpa ityarthavādaḥ.¹ Vātsyāyana in his commentary on purākalpa writes :

Aitihiyasamācharito vidhiḥ purākalpa iti. Tasmādvā etena purā brāhmaṇā bahiṣpavamānam sāmastomamastaushan. Yajñam pratanavāmaha ityādi.²

The main constituent of purākalpa is historical events. To illustrate his commentary, Vātsyāyana quotes from the Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa. The Mahābhāṣya has a similar reference: purākalpa etadāsīt saṁskārottarakālam brāhmaṇā vyākaraṇam smādhīyate.³ In Vākyapadiya also it is stated : śrūyate hi purākalpe.⁴

Vātsyāyana and others have accepted itihāsa as an integral part of a brāhmaṇa; to accept their name as itihāsa is not improper.

Vātsyāyana further mentions: tasyeti śabdaviśeṣamevādhi-kurute bhagavānṛishih.⁵ The period of these sūtras as near about the first century of the Christian era is not correct.

The following references in the literature, equate brāhmaṇas and Vedas as equal; as subsidiary literature of the vedas and not of the brāhmaṇas. The references in the brāhmaṇas exclude the brāhmaṇas as Veda, these references in the śrauta-sūtras and the dharma-sūtras are insignificant :

(d) Āmnāyah punarmantrāścha brāhmaṇāni cha.⁴

These references from the Kalpa-sūtras are smṛiti. Smṛiti as an evidence has not the same value as śruti. Jaimini has clearly expressed that the kalpa-sūtras are smṛiti,⁵ and cannot be accepted as an evidence as these are paratah-pramāṇa. Though the brāhmaṇas are also paratah-pramāṇa, their comparative position is superior, due to their proximity to the Vedas. The brāhmaṇas have been called the Veda only ceremoniously, just like Āyurveda and Dhanurveda are also called the Veda and some of the quotations from the tantras are called mantra and śruti.

(a) Mādhava in the chapter on Yoga-śāstra in Sarva-darśana-saṁgraha writes that the mantras or hymns are of two types, viz, vedic and tāntrika.⁶ Kullūka in his commentary on Manusmṛiti writes : śrutiścha dvividhā vaidikī tāntrikī cha,⁷ i. e., śruti is of two types vaidikī and tāntrikī.

Many of the sentences in the śrauta-sūtras are at times called mantras. Bhaṭṭa Gopinātha in his commentary on Satyāshāḍa-śrauta-sūtra writes : sautreshu vaidikeshu cha mantreshu.⁸

Utpalāchārya in his Spanda-kārikā quotes Pancharātraśruti.⁹

Itihāsa and purāṇa are called Veda ceremoniously in Śatapatha;¹ similarly, the brāhmaṇas are called the Veda in Āpastamba and other śrauta-sūtras. It is also not certain if such sentences from Baudhāyana and other sūtra works are of the ṛishis who had composed them or added later on by their successive disciples etc. Govinda Svāmī has similarly, expressed.² If itihāsa and purāṇa are separate from the brāhmaṇas, how could these two be the name of the brāhmaṇas? Vātsyāyana in his commentry on the Nyāya-sūtrās states : pramāṇena khalu brāhmaṇenetihāsapurāṇasya prāmāṇyamabhyanuñjāyate,³ i. e., the authenticity of itihāsa and purāṇa is established by the authenticity of the brāhmaṇas. The Śatapatha brāhmaṇa has an interesting reference :

Athāshṭame ahan.....kaṁchiditihāsamāchakshīta..... Atha navame ahan.....tānupadiśati purāṇam vedah so ayamiti kinchit purāṇamāchakshīta.⁴

A large number of works on itihāsa and purāṇa were available even prior to the compilation of these brāhmaṇas, as stated earlier. Their major portion, as expounded later on, has been incorporated in these brāhmaṇas. The brāhmaṇas are also named as itihāsa. Purāṇa is another name even though at times used as an adjective. The term purāṇa has been explained as : purāṇam kasmāt. Purā navam bhavati,⁵ i. e., being the first it is new. The brāhmaṇas testify to this statement. The hymns have only a general allusion. This strengthens us to state that the brāhmaṇas are not the Veda.

H. Pāṇini had composed the following aphorisms :

(a) Dṛishṭam sāmā.⁶

1 इतिहासो वेदः । पुराणं वेदः । 13.4.3. 12-13

2 In his commentary on इति बोधायनः, 3.5.8, he writes: बोधायनसंशब्दनादन्यस्तच्छिष्योऽस्य ग्रन्थस्य कर्तेति गम्यते ।

- (b) Tena proktam.¹
- (c) Purāṇaprokteshu brāhmaṇakalpesu.²
- (d) Upajāñāte.³
- (e) Krite granthe.⁴

These mean that :

- (a) the hymns are draṣṭha or revealed ;
- (b) recensions (excluding the Vedas), the brāhmaṇas and the kalpas are propounded;
- (c) intuition is the source of the works by Pāṇini and others; and
- (d) ordinary works.

Even here, the brāhmaṇas are treated as separate from the mantra-saṁhitās. The brāhmaṇas are not given an equal status. The hymns are stated to have been revealed and the brāhmaṇas as expounded. An anukramaṇī by a ṛishi of a brāhmaṇa has neither been referred to nor is available, whereas anukramaṇīs of saṁhitās are available. If a saṁhitā has a brāhmaṇa portion included in it, the ṛishis of the brāhmaṇa portion are not mentioned in the anukramaṇīs. Prajāpati is mentioned in general as the primordial seer of the brāhmaṇas and from him the meaning of the Veda had emanated. The Ārshādhyāya of the Chārāyaṇīya-saṁhitā called as Mantrārshādhyāya refers to only one or two ṛishis of the brāhmaṇas, and in general the ṛishis of the brāhmaṇa portion have not been described. The very name Mantrārshādhyāya denotes that it relates to the ṛishis of the mantras only.⁵ The following reading is available in it : brāhmaṇāni prajāpateh. Brāhmaṇapaṭh-itān mantrānathodāharishyāmah.⁶ The ṛishis related to the mantras contained in the brāhmaṇas are mentioned but none of a brāhmaṇa is mentioned. Prajāpati, though the name of the God himself, is also the name of a particular rishi. Brahmā is also called Prajāpati. He is the primordial exponent of the brāhmaṇas. He is a seer of the brāhmaṇas. The few other similar references are of seers in general and have no particular allusion.

Some of the scholars consider Vātsyāyana to have mentioned the rishis of the brāhmaṇas in his commentary as : ya eve mantra-brāhmaṇasya drashtārah pravaktāraścha te khalvitihāsapurāṇasya dharmasāstrasya cheti.¹ A careful study of his commentary in—‘Ya evāptā vedārthānām drashtārah,²—helps to understand that the meaning of brāhmaṇasya drashtārah is vedārthānām drashtārah.³ Besides the meaning of the Vedas, their rishis had added itihāsa and purāṇa while propounding them. The Nirukta clearly states :

(a) Rīsherdrīshṭārthasya prītirbhavatyākhyānasamyuktā.⁴

(b) Ityākhyānam.⁵

i. e., the meaning and explanation of the Veda when added with itihāsa etc. appeals more. If the brāhmaṇas are accepted as the Veda, where will the meaning of the Vedas be available. The meaning of the hymns is available in the brāhmaṇas, but the meaning of the brāhmaṇas is no where available. Therefore, the hymns alone form part of the Veda and the brāhmaṇas specifically explain them. The rishis could derive the meaning of the Vedas from the God; adding ākhyāna etc. they expounded their meaning and that meaning was termed as brāhmaṇa. Vātsyāyana has explained it as vedārtha-drashtā.

Even the use of apaśyat in the brāhmaṇas is with the same purpose. A distinctive line between understanding the meaning of the Veda is drawn in the Nirukta : tad yadenāmstapasyamānān brahma svayambhvbhyanarshat ṛishayo abhavan tadṛishīṇāmṛishitvam. Iti vijñāyate.¹ Only the original hymns have the nitya-ānupūrvī; the brāhmaṇas and even the ordinary recensions are without it. The ānupūrvī is anitya even in the recensions as stated in the Mahābhāṣya :

Yadyapyartho nityo yā tvasau varṇānupūrvī sānityā, tadbhedāchchaitadbhavati kāṭhakaṁ kālāpakam maudakam paippalādakamiti.²

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has another reference :

Saptāksharam vai brahma argityekāksharam yajuriti dve.

Sāmeti dve aatha yadato anyad brahmaiva tad.

Dvyaksharam vai brahma. Tadetatsarvam saptāksharam brahma.³

The Veda or Brahma has seven letters or aksharas :

Rik	1 Letter
Yajuh	2 Letters
Sāma	2 Letters
Brahma = Atharva	2 Letters
The complete Brahma						7 Letters

This complete Brahma is of seven letters. The phrase *sarvam-brahma*⁴ implies that the Veda is confined within it. Only Rik, Yajuh, Sāma and Atharva are mentioned, the brāhmaṇas are not mentioned. The Veda is named as Brahma. This Brahma having been explained by Brahmā and others came to be designated as brāhmaṇa. The Brahma was revealed to the seers but not the brāhmaṇa. They could grasp only the substance of the brāhmaṇa as stated in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇas: sa etam trivṛitam saptatantumekavimśatisamstham yajñamapaśyat.⁵ The substance of the yajña was seen by the seers in the mantras or the hymns; similarly, they had seen the substance of the brāhmaṇas. Mahābhāshya again refers : paśyati tvāchāryah.¹

Vātsyāyana in his commentary on another sūtra states : pramāṇam śabdah. Yathā loke. Vibhāgaścha brāhmaṇavākyaṇām trividhah,² i. e., the evidence of śabda is to be accepted. The teachings of the rishis are also to be accepted. The three-fold division of a sentence is available in the brāhmaṇas. Śruti is separate. The brāhmaṇas having itihāsa, its words as compared to the mantras are by human beings and, therefore, these are not the Veda. Preceded by śabda, the use of loke refers to the words or śabda used by common people. Vātsyāyana has also written :

*Yathā laukike vākye vibhāgenārthagrahaṇāt pramāṇatvamevam veda-vākyaṇāmapi vibhāgenārthagrahaṇāt pramāṇatvam bhavitumarhatiti*³

The use of vedevākyaṇām is only formal and cannot be correlated with brāhmaṇas.

I. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa states :

Rigvedo yajurvedah sāmavedo atharvāṅgīrasa itihāsah purāṇam vidyā upanishadah ślokaḥ sūtrāṇyanuvyākhyāni vyākhyānāni vāchaiva samrāt prajāyante.⁴

A similar reading is available in another place in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁵ Upanishads are treated as separate from the Vedas. Upanishads forming a part of the brāhmaṇas being separate from the Vedas, therefore, the brāhmaṇas themselves are separate from the Vedas. In Tājñavalkya-smṛiti, a similar idea is expressed :

Yato vedāḥ purāṇam cha vidyopanishadastathā, ślokaḥ sūtrāṇi bhāṣhyāṇi yatkinchidvāṅgamayam kvachit.⁶

Viśvarūpa in his commentary clarifies : upanishadām prithag-vachanam vedabhāgāntarasya tādarthya-pradarśanārtham.¹

The following verses from chapter 331 and 323, respectively of Śānti-parva of the Mahābhārata, further, clarify this view point :

- (a) Āraṇyakam cha vedebhya oshadhībhyo amṛitam yathā.²
- (b) Ṛigvede sayajurvede tathāivatharvasāmasu, purāṇe sopanishade tathāiva jyotiṣhe arjuna.³

The use of the terms Rik and Rigveda, do not mean that the former refers to the Vedas and the latter to the Vedas and the brāhmaṇas. Both these phrases are used only for the saṃhitās. In a large number of the kaṇḍikās of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa it is repeatedly stated :⁴

- (a) Tānupadiśati ṛicho vedah.....ṛichām sūktam vyāchakṣhaṇa.3
- (b) Tānupadiśati yajūmshi vedah.....yajushāmanuvākam vyāchakṣhaṇa.6
- (c) Tānupadiśati ātharvaṇo vedah.....atharvaṇāmekam parvam vyāchakṣhaṇa.7
- (d) Tānupadiśati sāmāni vedah.....sāmnām daśatam brūyāt.14

Bhavatrāta in the introduction to his commentary on the Jaiminiya-śrauta-sūtra writes : yadṛichā hotṛitvam.....Atrargādibhiḥ śabdairvedā evābhidhīyante,⁵ i. e., the phrase rik etc. refer to the Vedas. The phrase rigādi means only the Vedas. The brāhmaṇas of the Rigveda and the other Vedas do not have the sūktas, therefore, the phrase ṛigvedādi is used only for the saṃhitās of the hymns and not for the brāhmaṇas.

In kaṇḍikās 8, 9 and 10 of this chapter of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa Āṅgīrasa Veda, Sarpa-vidyā-Veda and Devajana-vidyā-Veda are mentioned. These are the sub-divisions of the Atharva-veda. These all contain parvas. The remaining Māyā-Veda, Itihāsa Veda, Purāṇa Veda are the traditional collections. These are neither complete works nor their sub-divisions. These are qualified by the following uses : kānchinmāyām kuryāt; kānchiditihāsmāchakshīta; kinchit purāṇamāchakshīta.¹ The phrase veda is used only in a formal manner in these three kaṇḍikās. It is stated in the 15th kaṇḍikā : *āchashṭe...sarvān vedān*² i.e., to speak of all the Vedas. Here, only the Veda is alluded to and the brāhmaṇas are not at all mentioned. Yājñavalkya and other ṛishis had never equated the Vedas with the brāhmaṇas.

J. Each brāhmaṇa has references to the revelation of the Veda through Prajāpati³ :

(a) Sa etāni trīṇi jyotīṃshyabhyatapyata so agnerevarcho aasṛijata vāyoryajūmshyādityāt sāmāni. Sa etām trayīm vidyāmabhyatapyata...Athaitasyā eva trayyai vidyāyai tejorasam prāvṛihita. Eteshāmeva vedānām bhishajyāyai sa bhuṛityṛichām prāvṛihat.....

(c) Sa etānstisro devatā abhyatapat. Tāsām tapyamānānām rasān prāvṛihat. Agnerṛicho vāyoryajūmshi sāmānyādityāt. 2. Sa etām trayīm vidyā-mabhyatapat. Tasyāstapyamānāyā rasān prāvṛihat. Bhūrityaṛigbhyah.¹

Such examples could be multiplied. In all these, Rik and Rigveda are synonyms. The Trayī-vidyā is formed of Rik, Yaju and Sāma. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa calls these as Rigveda, Yajurveda and Sāmaveda. So these are synonyms. Certain scholars consider that these three should not be equated as the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has both the hymns and the brāhmaṇa portion; whereas Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa has only the hymns. The reference to the context in these particular chapters relates to the same subject, therefore, their meaning leads to the same conclusion. The brāhmaṇas are not revealed along with the Vedas, these have been compiled at a much later date. Veda does not include a brāhmaṇa in these references.

Śabara Svāmī considers the brāhmaṇas² as revealed to seers and quotes from an earlier work : smaryate cha—Vaiśampāyanah sarvaśākhādhyāyī. Kathah punarimām kevalām śākhāmadhyāpayām babhūba, iti.,² i. e., Kāṭha recension and brāhmaṇa were available even before Kāṭha ṛishi. Śabara Svāmī had considered the brāhmaṇas as the Veda,³ therefore, his approach is in the same direction. Instead of illustrating his writings from the hymns, he always quoted from earlier writers.

Kāṭha recension and its brāhmaṇa though contemporaneous with Vaiśampāyana were never earlier to Vyāsa. Not to speak of the the brāhmaṇas even the recensions were not available in the beginning of the universe. Only the mantra-saṃhitās were available.

ARE BRĀHMAṆAS THE VEDAS

The following reference from Mahāvastu, a Buddhist work, clearly differentiates between Veda and brāhmaṇa. Vedas are constituted of the hymns alone and not of the brāhmaṇas. According to the tradition known to the Buddhist scholars, the brāhmaṇas were never equated with the Vedas. A phrase brāhmaṇavedeshu is used in Mahāvastu, i.e., the brāhmaṇas and the Veda were separate from each other, e.g.,

Tasya rājño purohito brahmāyuh nāma trayāṇām vedānām pārago sanirghaṇṭhakaitabhānām itihāsapanchamānām aksharapadavyākaraṇe analpako so ayamāchāryah kuśalo brāhmaṇavedeshu api śāstreshu dānasamvibhāgaśīlo daśakuśalakarmapathām samādāya vartati.¹

The three references quoted earlier stand confirmed by another evidence from Shadvinśa Brāhmaṇa:

Prajāpatirvā imāmstrīnvedānasṛijata.....Tebhyo bhūrbhuvah svaritya-ksharad bhūrityṛigbhyo aksharat.....Bhuvāriti yajurbhyo aksharat.....Svariti sāmabhyo aksharat.²

Herein, the three synonyms of three Vedas Rik, Yajuh and Sāma are mentioned; the use of the term Rigveda does not denote the mantras and the brāhmaṇas of the Rigveda.

K. Gopatha Brāhmaṇa has a decisive evidence :

Yān mantrānapaśyata sa ātharvaṇo vedo abhavat.³

This reference clearly states that the collection of mantras alone is Veda.

L. Gopatha Brāhmaṇa has another interesting reference:

Tasya (Omityetadaksharasya) prathamayā svaramātrayā Rīgvedam anvabhavat.⁴

Tasya (omityetadaksharasya) vakāramātrayā Atharvavedam	anvabhavat. ³
Tasya (omityetadaksharasya) makāraśrutyā Upanishadah	anvabhavat. ⁴

Rigveda was formed of the first mātrā of Om, Yajurveda from the second, Sāmaveda from the third, Atharvaveda from the vakāra-mātrā and Upanishads from makāra-śruti. Since the Upanishads were formed separately from the four Vedas, these are separate from the Vedas. Had these and the brāhmaṇas formed part of the Vedas, these should have been formed along with the Vedas.

M. Śaunaka, the teacher of Kātyāyana, writes in the beginning of Ārshānukramaṇi : Rigvedamakhilam drashtāro ye hi munipuṅgavah,⁵ i. e., the best of the munis to whom the complete Rigveda was revealed. Śaunaka narrates only the ṛishis of the mantras or the hymns. According to Śaunaka, the collection of the hymns formed the complete part of the Rigveda. The Rigveda never had a line from the brāhmaṇa. The view point of the teacher normally should have been followed by the disciples. Such a reference as mantrabrāhmaṇayorvedanāmadheyam in the works of his disciple, Kātyāyana, appears to be an inter-polation.

N. The brāhmaṇas of the Sāmaveda refer to a subrahmanyā.⁶ A portion of it reads : Kausika brāhmaṇa gautama bruvāṇeti.⁷ Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa comments : śāśvadvaitadāruṇinādhunopajñātam yad gautama bruvāṇeti,⁸ i. e., this portion of subrahmanyā has been prepared by intuition by Āruṇi, just now.

ARE BRĀHMANAS THE VEDAS

Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa has another reference : atha ha vā eke kauśika brāhmaṇa gautama bruvāṇeti āhvayanti. Tadu ha vā āruṇi-naiva yaśasvinopajñātam¹, i. e., a few scholars call it Kauśika Brāhmaṇa. It was intuitively known to Āruṇi. Upa-jñata works were composed by ordinary people.² Kauśika Brāhmaṇa is a part of subrahmaṇyā. Jaiminiya and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇas refer to it as composed by Āruṇi. Śatapatha even uses the phrase adhunaiva, i. e., just now. It is a further evidence to prove that the brāhmaṇas of the Sāmaveda were compiled alongwith the Śatapatha and other brāhmaṇas and Yājñavalkya and other rishis accepted these brāhmaṇas as composed by them and not to be equated with the mantras.

It is written in the second kaṇḍikā of Charaṇa-vyūha :

Triguṇam paṭhyate yatra mantrabrāhmaṇayoh saha,
Yajurvedah sa vijñeyah śeshāh śākhāntarāh smṛitāh.³

Charaṇa-vyūha is not an authentic and dependable work. Its eight or nine different types are available. Its edition by Weber and that published from Kāśī differ. Mahidāsa has a different verse to comment :

Mantrabrāhmaṇayorvedah triguṇam yatra paṭhyate,
Yajurvedah sa vijñeya anye śākhāntarāh smṛitāh.⁴

The former verse in the Charaṇa-vyūha is not commented upon by Mahidāsa, instead he writes his own verse as above and comments on it separately. He writes : etādṛiśa paṭhanam śākhāyā adhyayanam (yatra) sa yajurvedah. Tachcha taittirīyaśākhāyāmevāsti.⁵ This verse appears to have been inter-polated by a follower of the Taittirīya recension.

O. Another evidence in the Mimāṃsā-sūtras helps to establish that the brāhmaṇas were not revealed like the hymns, as: mantropadeśo vā na bhāshikasya prāyopapatterbhāshikaśrutih.¹ Śabara in his commentary writes: bhāshāsvaro brāhmaṇe pravṛittah, i.e., the brāhmaṇas have the same svara as is available in the language of the common man. As the svaras of the brāhmaṇas are laukika these cannot be revealed by God. Satyavrata Sāmaśramī in his Trayi-parichaya has put forth this view in details.

P. The brāhmaṇas refer to the pratikas of the hymns and use the phrase iti at their end; followed by commentary on the hymns and mention of the rishis. Kāṭhaka-saṃhitā has the references :³

(a) mahi trīṇāmavo astu.

(b) Ityesha prājāpatyastrichah.

(c) Sa vāmadeva ukhyamagrimabibhastamavaikshata sa etat sūktama-paśyat kṛiṇushva pājah prasitim na prithvim, iti.

Similarly Ashtādhyāyī and other works do not accept the brāhmaṇas as the Vedas.

Dhūrta-svāmī while commenting on mantrabrāhmaṇayorvedanā-madheyam of Āpastamba-paribhāshā-sūtra writes: kaiśchit mantrāṇāmeva vedatvamāśṛitam.⁴ Haradatta Miśra in his commentary on the same sūkta writes: kaiśchinmantrāṇāmeva vedatvamākhyātam,⁵ i.e., certain scholars accept mantras alone as the Veda. According to both Dhūrta-svāmī and Haradatta Miśra certain scholars used to accept the mantras alone as the Vedas.

After the Mahābhārata period, the period of only yajñas came into prominence. The brāhmaṇas were in constant use and gained special respect. At that time, these came to be equated with the Vedas. Not only the brāhmaṇas, even the dharma-sūtras are at times called as āmnāya. Vīramitrodaya writes in his Saṃskāra-prakāśa : mantrabrāhmaṇayorvedah śaḍangameka iti gautamah¹ Maskarī in his commentary on sūtra-yatra chāmnāyo vidadhyāt writes; athavā-āmnāyaśabdena manuruchyate,² i.e., the phrase āmnāya could refer to Manusmṛiti, as well. An author of dharma-śāstra uses the word āmnāya for Manusmṛiti; similarly, the brāhmaṇas being a compendium to the performance of sacrifices, had been called the Veda only ceremoniously but not as an actuality.

Bhaṭṭa Kumārila writes in his Tantra-vārttika:

Smṛitigranthe apyāmnāyaśabdaprayogāt. Smārtadharmādhikāre hi Śaṃkhalikhitābhyāmuktam-āmnāyah smṛitidhāraka iti. Granthakāragatāyāh smṛitestatkṛitagrānthāmnāyah smṛitigrānthādhyāyinām smṛitidhāraṇārthatvenoktah.³

Smṛiti works are called āmnāya. Śaṃkhalikhita also says so. Readers of smṛiti works can call their original work i.e., Manusmṛiti as āmnāya.

Śabara and later scholars called these as the Vedas. Even common man started treating them as the Veda. This was the origin of the mistake. In the later periods many āchāryas could not conform to this idea; they continued to treat the brāhmaṇas as separate from the Veda. However, these āchāryas did not raise their voice against the strong prevalent view. Svāmī Dayānanda Sarasvatī had raised his voice against this view and wrote : Ityādi bahubhih pramāṇairmantrāṇāmeva vedasamjñā na brāhmaṇagrānthānāmiti siddham.⁴

4 इत्यादि बहुभिः प्रमाणैर्मन्त्राणामेव वेदसंज्ञा न ब्राह्मणग्रन्थानामिति सिद्धम्, वेदसंज्ञाविचारविषय, ऋग्वेदादिभाष्यभूमिका

To conclude, it is reiterated that the brāhmaṇas were propounded by Prajāpati and later seers in the language other than that of the mantras; these were compiled in the Mahābhārata period; these brāhmaṇas gained importance when sacrifices came to be considered as the only meaning of the Vedas and their having the details of the rituals, these came to be known as the Vedas like other dharma-śāstras; these should be understood in their true context as the explanation of the Vedas and not the Veda itself.

CHAPTER EIGHT

THEIR HELP TO UNDERSTAND THE VEDA

Brāhmaṇas as basis of Nirukta and Nighaṇṭu

Nirukta, probably, is the earliest work, at present available, which contains the meaning of the Veda. It is one of the ten works to be followed by the followers of the Rigveda. Followers of the Rigveda in South India even now specially study it. This was not the only Nirukta available at one time; there were many more similar works which have been lost now. Nighaṇṭu is the basis of Nirukta. Both Nirukta and Nighaṇṭu were composed by Yāska. Nighaṇṭu is a lexicon of Vedic words. Possibly, many more Nighaṇṭus had preceded the Nighaṇṭu at present available. Yāska writes :

Athotābhīdhānaih samyujya haviśchodayati—indrāya vṛitraghne. Indrāya vṛitrate. Indrāyāmhomuche, iti. Tānyapyeke samāmananti. Bhūyāmsi tu samāmnānāt. Yattu samvijñānabhūtam syāt prādhānyastuti tat samāmane.²

1 A Nirukta by Upamanyu is referred to by G. Oppert in his List p. II, 510.

2 अथोताभिधानैः संयुज्य हविश्चोदयति—इन्द्राय वृत्रघ्ने । इन्द्राय वृत्रतुरे । इन्द्रायांहोमुचे इति । तान्यप्येके समामनन्ति । भूयांसि तु समाम्नानात् । यत्तु संविज्ञानभूतं स्यात् प्राधान्यस्तुति तत् समामने, 7.13, see 2.6.6, MS

i.e., many āchāryas have an explanation in which the adjectives of the devatās are collected, myself on the other hand explain the main devatā, viz., Agni etc. which has to be prayed.

Nirukta-Nighaṇṭu by Kautsavya, which also forms part as a Parīśiṣṭa of the Nighaṇṭu by Yāska and the Nighaṇṭu of Atharvaveda, clearly brings forth the dependence of the Nighaṇṭus on the brāhmaṇas. The following comparative study of the meanings in the Nighaṇṭu and the brāhmaṇas is self evident :

This is not an exhaustive list. Most of the references are from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa; other brāhmaṇas, similarly, have a large number of references. Yāska often quotes from the brāhmaṇasto authenticate his meanings given in the Nirukta by stating : iti brāhmaṇam and iti ha vijñāyate. These brāhmaṇas were definitely the basis for the meanings given by Yāska in his Nirukta or Nigahṇṭu. In the Vedic Kosha by Bhagavad Datta, most of the meanings given are not available in the Nirukta and Nigahṇṭu by Yāska. Yāska has also stated : bhūyāmsi tu samāmnānāt.¹ A large number of the meanings available in the brāhmaṇas can augment the material of the Nigahṇṭu.

Basis of the Meanings in the Brāhmaṇas

The meanings given in the brāhmaṇas are derived from hymns. These meanings were known to the seers by their intuition. These are all contained in these brāhmaṇas. The real meaning of the Veda could be understood only through these brāhmaṇas. This has been the main-stay of all the earlier āchāryas. The occidental scholars mostly have a contradictory opinion. Macdonell writes : "The investigation of the Brāhmaṇas has shown that being mainly concerned with speculation on the nature of sacrifice, they were already far removed from the spirit of the composers of the Vedic hymns, and contain very little capable of throwing light on the original sense of those hymns. They only give occasional explanations of the Mantras and these explanations are often very fanciful. How completely they can misunderstand the meaning intended by the seers appears sufficiently from the following two examples. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (7.4.1.9) in referring to the refrain of Rv.X. 21, कस्मै देवाय हविषा विधेम, 'to what god should we offer worship with oblation,' says Ka is Prajāpati : to him let us offer oblation. Another Brāhmaṇa passage, in explaining the epithet 'golden-handed' (हिरण्य-पाणि) as applied to the sun, remarks that the sun had lost his hand and had got instead one of gold. Quite apart from the linguistic evidence, such interpretations show that there was already, a considerable gap between the period of the Brāhmaṇas and that of the Mantras."

1 भूयांसि तु समाम्नानात्, 7.13

155

The following propositions enunciated by Macdonell above need a critical analysis :

- A. The occidental scholars have carried out researches in the brāhmaṇas ;
- B. The main theme of the brāhmaṇas is to visualise the form of a sacrifice ;
- C. The brāhmaṇas have not been able to grasp the idea of the seers of the mantras ;
- D. The brāhmaṇas have very little material which should be helpful to understand the meaning of the Veda ;
- E. The brāhmaṇas give occasional explanations of the sense of the mantras ;
- F. These explanations are very often fanciful ;
- G. The explanations in the brāhmaṇas are contradictory to the intended meaning of the seers as it is clear from the following two examples :

(a) कस्मै देवाय हविषा विधेम. This richā is repeated in Rigveda 10.121. It means 'to what god should we offer worship with oblation.' The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has its correct explanation, wherein 'Ka' means Prajāpati, and we offer oblation to him.'

(b) Another brāhmaṇa refers to a hand of gold. Sūrya had lost his hand and had got instead a hand of gold.

H. Such interpretations show that there was a considerable gap between the period of the brāhmaṇas and the mantras. Linguistic evidence also supports it.

A. Martin Haug, Aufrecht, Lindner, Weber, Oertel, Duke Gaastra and a few other western scholars have brought out editions of the brāhmaṇas like the Aitareya etc. Eggeling in his translation of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and Keith in his translation of Taittirīya-saṁhitā have not critically treated the subject. Max Muller writes : "The Brāhmaṇas represent no doubt a most interesting phase in the history of Indian mind, but judged by themselves, as literary productions, they are most disappointing. No one would have supposed that at so early a period, and in so primitive a state of society, there could have risen up a literature which for pedantry and downright absurdity can hardly be matched any where. There is no lack of striking thoughts, of bold expressions, of sound reasoning, and curious traditions in these collections. But these are only like the fragments of a 'torso' like precious gems set in brass and lead. The general character of these works is marked by shallow and insipid grandiloquence, by priestly conceit and antiquarian pedantry. It is most important to the historian that he should know how soon the fresh and healthy growth of a nation can be blighted by priestcraft and superstition. It is most important that we should know that nations are liable to these epidemics in youth as well as in their dotage. These works deserve to be studied as the physician studied the twaddle of idiots, and the raving of mad men." (p. 389, History of Sanskrit Literature)

The meaning in the brāhmaṇas is not easily understood especially when a major portion of our literature has been lost. When Sāyaṇa and other mediaeval writers had not been able to completely grasp the meaning, their comprehension by the foreign writers is an impossibility. The brāhmaṇas are full of allegorical references and need to be carefully studied. An interesting example is :

(a) Prajāpatirha vai svām duhitaramabhidhadyau. Divam voshasam vā mithunyenayāsyāmiti tām sambabhūva.¹

(b) Sa vai yajña eva prajāpatih.²

Here, Prajāpati is the name of Sūrya, as evident from the references in the brāhmaṇas ;

(1) Yo hyeva savitā sa prajāpatih.³

(2) Prajāpatirvai savitā.⁴

(3) Prajāpatirvai suparṇo garutmānesha savitā.⁵

i. e., Savitā, or Sūrya or Prajāpati are all the names of Prajāpati. Prajāpatī also means sacrifice, e. g.,

(1) Yajña u vai prajāpatih.⁶

(2) Prajāpatirvai yajñah.⁷

i. e., yajña is Prajāpati and Prajāpati is Sūrya :

(1) Yajña eva Savitā.⁸

(2) Sa yah sa yajño asau sa ādityah.⁹

Savitā is called yajña as on account of Vishṇu = Sūrya, sacrifices and all other actions of this universe are being performed. This Prajāpati or nebula has diva or prakāśa and Ushā two twin daughters. The Savitā or Prajāpati is the father of all the devas., as : savitā vai devānām prasavitā.¹ Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa has a clear reference : Sah (Prajāpatih) mukhāddevānasṛijata,² i.e., Prajāpati or Savitā or Sūrya gives birth to all the devas or the organs of sense, i. e., indriyas through his mouth or the rays or the electrons. Eggeling translates it as, 'By (the breath of) his mouth he created the gods. This rendering by Eggeling is incorrect. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has another reference : sah (prajāpati) āsyenaiva devānasṛijata.³ Prāṇa or the organs of vitality are devas, i. e., these are synonyms, as : tasmāt prāṇā devāh.⁴ Prāṇa is also asura or again vital breath. This is born of Prajāpati or Sūrya or Savitā i. e., through heat of the sun or electrons. This is further evident from the following reference in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : sa (prajāpatih) agni-meva mukhājjanayām chakre.⁵ Prajāpati or the Sūrya has given birth to agni of this universe as well as of the antariksha through radiant electrons.

Nirukta has a relevant quotation from some brāhmaṇa : sordevānasṛijata tat surāṇām suratvam. Asorasurānasṛijata tadsurāṇāmasuratvam iti vijñāyate,⁶ i. e., he created the devas from the radiant electrons and the asuras from non-radiant paramāṇus. Kāṭhaka-saṃhitā has a similar reference : ahnā devānasṛijata te śuklam varṇamapushyan. Rātryā asurānste kṛishṇā abhavan.⁷

Div means bright and ushā burning. An exhaustive critical study of the brāhmaṇas and other literature will help to grasp the true allegorical meaning of these references.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has another allegorical reference : iyam vai pṛithivyaditih seyam devānām patnī,⁸ i. e., this earth is the wife of the devas. A single prithivī cannot be the wife of a large number of devas. It is another allegorical reference to explain a scientific aspect.

Svāmī Dayānanda Sarasvatī has explained the correct sense of this reference.¹ Bhaṭṭa Kumārila has also referred to it in his Tantra Vārttika :

Prajapatistāvat prajāpālanādhikārādāditya evocyate. Sa chāruṇodaya-velāyāmushasamuddyanabhyait. Sā tadāgamanādevopajāyata iti tadduhitritvena vyapadiśyate. Tasyām chārukiraṇākhyavijānikshepāt stripurushayogavadupachārah.²

Bhaṭṭa Kumārila has given the correct translation of the controversial passage. Max Muller, however, expresses surprise and writes in his history of Sanskrit Littrature (p. 529), "Sometimes, however, we feel surprised at the precision with which even such modern writers as Kumārila are able to read the true meaning of their mythology." The correct rendering of this story is available in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa itself as : so (prajāpatiḥ or saṁvatsarah or vāyuh) ādityena divam mithunam samabhavat.³ Griffith insists on following the incorrect meaning and translates it in the appendix and writes that the whole passage is difficult and obscure.

The only apt meaning of Prajāpati has been explained above. Strenuous efforts could help to explain the correct meaning of other similar allegorical references. An attempt has been made by the occidental and most of the Indian scholars; but it is the only need of the hour.

B. Yajña has been equated with sacrifice only. It is one of its meanings; but is not necessarily applicable every where in the understanding of the Veda or the brāhmaṇas.⁴ While explaining this word the brāhmaṇas have explained the creation of the universe and all the scientific aspects of it.

C. In substance, the brāhmaṇas are very near to the Vedas and help to understand the meaning of the mantras. Each word in a brāhmaṇa has more than one meaning as the Nirukta says : bahubhaktivādīni hī brāhmaṇāni.¹ In general, the earlier foreign writers had accepted only one meaning of each word. Interpretations by them as such were always incorrect. The brāhmaṇas on the other hand have more than one meaning of a word due to similarity of the qualities. This helped them to have many synonyms. Similar is the case with the language of the common man or the laukika bhāṣhā. By dividing the similar qualities it has been possible always to have synonyms. A few examples from Rigveda are given below :

Based on the mantras, these are considered as synonyms in the brāhmaṇas. Yāska accepts these as meaning prithivī or earth in the Nighaṇṭu on the basis of the hymns and the brāhmaṇas. ¹ Long and short paths - Sāyaṇa this word the brāhmaṇas have explained the creation of the universe and all the scientific aspects of it.

Tvam mahīmavanim	4.19.6	Urvī pṛithvī	1.185.7

Based on the mantras, these are considered as synonyms in the brāhmaṇas. Yāska accepts these as meaning prithivī or earth in the Nighaṇṭu on the basis of the hymns and the brāhmaṇas. These are the synonyms for sūrya, indra, dyāvā-prithivī, aśva etc. Here, for example, indra is not the name of a particular person.

¹ Long and short paths - Sāyaṇa

Formation of a sentence helps to understand that any wealthy object could be called indra.

Fifty seven different words for vāk are used in the Nighaṇṭu. These include dhārā, mandrā, sarasvatī, jihvā, rik, anusṭup and other words, as well. In the brāhmaṇas some of the names have a similar meaning. The following four words used as an adjective have the same meaning in the Veda :¹

Mandrayā soma dhārayā	9.6.1	Mandrayā deva jihvayā	5.26.1
Mandrayā cha jihvayā	7.16.9	Yam yāchāmyaham vāchā sarasvatyā	5.7.5
Mandrāh girah	7.18.3	Atra mandrā giro devayantīrupasthuh	7.18.3

Regarding śloka, rik and other words, Macdonell has expressed doubt, as he writes : "Thus among the synonyms of vac 'speech' appear such words as śloka, nivid, re, gāthā, anusṭubh, which denote different kinds of verses or compositions and can never have been employed to express the simple meaning of 'speech.'² On the other hand these words are available in the Veda, the recensions, Nighaṇṭu and the brāhmaṇas, e.g.,

Ṛichā girā maruto devyadite	8.27.5, RV
Ṛicham vācham prapadye	36.1, Yajurveda
Vācho...ṛicho girah susṭutayah	10.91.12, RV
Ṛicham gāthām brahma param jigāṃsan	135.79, Kauśika-sūtra

Rik has been positively used as an adjective of the word vāk and its meaning is, therefore, speech. Similarly, the word śloka, though used for a verse is also used for speech in the Rigveda. It is also evident from a hymn of the Yajurveda : chakshurma... vibhāhi. Śrotramme ślokaya,³ i.e., put light into my eyes and hearing in my ears.

1 Aitareya Brāhmaṇa reads : vāyurhyeva prajāpatistuktamṛishiṇā-pavamānah prajāptiriti; i.e., vāyu is Prajāpati. Hymn 9.5.9 in Rigveda explains that what flows is vāyu.

THEIR HELP TO UNDERSTAND THE VEDA

Śloka here, has been used for speech or śabda or hearing. The following hymns from the Rigveda also substantiate this view :

(a) Ṛitasya śloko badhirā tatarda karṇāh,¹ i.e., speech or śabda of truth is a remedy for deaf ears;

(b) Mimihi ślokaṁāsyē,² i.e., speak the śabda of Veda from the mouth;

(c) Praite vadantu pra vayam vadām grāvabhyo vācham vadatā vadadbhyah yadadrayah parvatāh sākamāśavah ślokaṁ ghosham bharathendrāya sominah.³

Here, śloka is a synonym of ghosha or vāṇī. The remaining words are available in the Vedas and mean speech. These very words in the Vedas have other meaning also according to the reference to the context. While explaining the meaning of the Veda, it is essential that the meaning which is correct according to the reference to the context alone should be used.

Another decisive example is available in the word adhvara, which is a synonym of yajña in Nighaṇṭu.⁴ Śatapatha and the other brāhmaṇas have its similiar use. Its use as a synonym of yajña is explained in the Rigveda as : agne yam yajñamadhvaram viśvatah paribhūraṣi.⁵ Skanda Svāmī writes in his commentary on the Rigveda : adhavaraśabdo ayam yajñamityanena paunasattayānna yajñanāma kim tarhi. Tadviśeṣaṇam.⁶ Here, adhvara is an adjective of yajña; being adjective, it becomes a synonym of yajña elsewhere. All the adjectives are not synonyms ; but where the qualified and the qualifying words have similar qualities these become synonyms. Scholars not grasping this point are not able to translate correctly.

6 अध्वर शब्दोऽयं यज्ञमित्यनेन पौनसत्तयान्न यज्ञनाम किं तर्हि । तद्विशेषणम् ।

Oldenberg writes, "Agni, whatever sacrifice and worship thou encompassest on every side."¹ In note number 1 on it, he further writes, "worship is a very inadequate translation of adhvara, which is nearly a synonym of यज्ञ..., Prof. Max Muller writes : 'I accept the natives explanation अध्वर without a flaw, perfect, whole, holy.'

Griffith in his translation of the Veda writes : 'Agni, the perfect sacrifice which thou encompassest, about.'

Macdonell also writes, 'O Agni, the worship and sacrifice that thou encompassest on every side, यज्ञ अध्वर again coordination with च; the former has a wider sense – worship (prayer and offering); the latter sacrificial act.'²

Oldenberg and Macdonell coordinate the two words by using cha. They do not accept the two words as qualifying and qualified. Since Griffith had been in India and also with the scholars of Kāśī, the translation of the scholars did not appeal him and he treats adhvara as an adjective. He translates it as perfect like Max Muller. He has translated this word as yajña in other references, as well. If the adjectives, according to the reference to the context, had been accepted as synonyms of the qualified, the meanings as contained in the brāhmaṇas could never have been distorted by these occidental scholars, in the followidg more examples :

(a) Aśmānam chitsvaryam parvatam girim;³ Max Muller translates it as the rocky mountain (cloud); and Griffith as the rocky mountain.

(b) Parvato girih;⁴ Max Muller translates it as the gnarled cloud.

(e) Varāham tiro adrimastā;¹ Griffith translates it as '.....the wild boar, shooting through the mountain.'

Nighaṇṭu settles this issue wherein it is written : adrih..... parvatah, Girih..... Varāhah.....iti meghanāmāni,² i. e., these are the names for cloud. Scholars should never have had any objection in accepting these as synonyms.

Indra also means vāyu, in the following references :

- (a) Indreṇa vāyunā;³
- (b) Esha indrāya vāyave svarjitparishichyate;⁴
- (c) Yo vai vāyuh sa indro ya indrah sa vāyuh;⁵
- (d) Ayam vā indro yo ayam pavate.⁶

Indra is the adjective of vāyu, and it means vāyu also.

Oldenberg translates yajña as sacrifice and adhvara as worship. Macdonell reverses the meaning by translating yajña as worship and adhvara as sacrifice. Oldenberg has accepted these as synonyms while translating :

- (a) Satyadharmānamadhvare,⁷ as 'whose ordinances for the sacrifice are true.'
- (b) Agnir yajñasyādhvarasya chetati,⁸ as 'Agni watches sacrifice and service.' But this meaning does not convey any sense.
- (c) Yajñānamadhvaraśriyam,⁹ as the beautifier of sacrifices.

In the following passages, Macdonell translates yajña as sacrifice :

(c) Yajñasya devamṛitvijam¹ as the divine ministrant of the sacrifice.

(b) Yajñaih vidhema;² offer worship with sacrifices.

(c) Yajñasya hi stha ṛitvijā³ as ye two (Indra-Agni) are ministrants of the sacrifice. In these references from the hymns the meaning of adhvara and yajña is sacrifice. The usage adhvaro vai yajñah⁴ in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa conveys the correct meaning of the Veda and is neither 'difficult nor obscure.'

The words in the Vedas have both yaugika, i.e., an etymological and yoga-rūḍha or both etymological and a conventional meaning. According to the qualifying sense, the adjective represents only the meaning of its derivative root. These adjectives in other places become the noun or have etymological and conventional meaning. Brāhmaṇas, therefore, have given the correct meanings of the words in the Veda. The scholars could not grasp the true sense of the brāhmaṇas and started calling their interpretations as showing a considerable gap between the period of the brāhmaṇas and that of the mantras. (Macdonell).

Muṇḍaka Upanishad has the correct interpretation in : yathorṇa-nābhih sṛijate grihṇate cha ⁵

D. It is, therefore, essential that the correct applicable meaning with reference to the context should first be grasped, before an attempt is made to translate the Vedas. For this very reason the translations of the Vedas by Roth, Weber, Max Muller, Oldenberg, Gelner, Whitney, Macdonell and others are far from the true and correct meaning of the Vedas.

Genealogies of the seers are available. One such genealogy is as follows :

Brahmā
|
Vasishṭha
|
Śakti
|
Parāśara
Vyāsa

The former four seers of this genealogy are those to whom many sūktas of the Vedas were revealed. Vyāsa had propounded all the recensions, except the four Vedas, and the brāhmaṇas. Yājñavalkya and others who had propounded the brāhmaṇas were his contemporary.¹ The seers of the preceding few dynasties had also been explaining the Vedas. It is not possible to forget the meanings in a few dynasties, especially, when there was a continuity in the genealogies of these seers. Therefore, there could never be a possibility of mistake in the interpretation of the Vedas by these seers. On the other hand, all possible mistakes have crept into the translations of the occidental scholars.

E. It has earlier been stated that the original exponents of the brāhmaṇas were the same seers to whom the meaning of the Vedas was revealed. These original brāhmaṇas formed the basis for the brāhmaṇas compiled during the Mahābhārata period. These brāhmaṇas therefore, have the material to correctly interpret the Vedas.

F. These brāhmaṇas alone are helpful in the correct interpretation of the Vedas, has been explained above. Macdonall wrote: 'As to the physical basis of the Āśvins, the language of the Rishis is so vague that they themselves do not seem to have understood what phenomenon these deities represented.'² He has again written, 'The physical basis of the Āśvins has been a puzzle from the time of the earliest interpreters before Yāska, who offered various explanations, while modren scholars also have suggested several theories. The two most probable are that the Āśvins represented either the morning twilight, as half light and half dark, or the morning and the evening star.¹

Ghate, in his Lectures on the Rigveda, writes, 'but these theories (dawn and the spring) cannot fully explain all the details connected with these legends.'²

The twin words āśvin and nāsatya are referred to in the Veda as qualifying and the qualified and have the same meaning, i.e., nāsatyāāśvinā.³ While mentioning the devatā or seers of the hymns, certain āchāryas refer to them as nāsatyau or āśvinau devate. Similarly, *devate*⁴ mentioned in Rigveda is nāsatyau in Bṛihaddevatā and āśvinau in the interpretation by Svāmī Dayānanda Sarasvatī.

Śrī Aravind has written on the word nāsatya and states : Nāsatya is supposed by some to be a patronymic, the old grammarians ingeniously fabricated for it the sense of 'true and false' but I take it from 'nas' to move..... They show that the two Āśvins are twin divine powers whose special function is to perfect the nervous or vital being in man in the sense of action and enjoyment. But they are also powers of truth, of intelligent action, of right enjoyment.⁵

Barth and other French translators have followed the European scholars in their interpretations.

Macdonell states that the Vedic seers had not understood the meaning of this word. Not only the Vedic seers and Yāska, but those scholars of the present age who have the correct grasp over these words and are not biassed, understand their meaning correctly. The root of the word āsvin is referred to in the Rigveda as : pūrvīraśnantā-vaśvinā, i. e., *āśnantau āsvinau*¹ or two comprehending *āsvi*s. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa explains its derivation as : āsvināvime hīdam sarvamāśnuvātām.² The meaning of āsviduaya in the Nirukta and Bṛihaddevatā is the same as available in the brāhmaṇas and the recensions of the Vedas. The derivation in the Nirukta is the same as in the Veda and the brāhmaṇa.

(a) Asvinau yad vyaśnuvāte sarvam. Rasenānyau joytīśānyah. Tatkāva-śvinau. Dyāvāprithivyāvityeke. Ahorātrau, ityēke, Suryāchandramasau, ityēke. Rājānau puṇyākṛitau, ityaitihāsikāh.³

A similar meaning is expressed in the Bṛihaddevatā :

(a) Aurṇavābho dvṛiche tvasmin āsvinau manyate stutau.⁶

(b) Sūryāchandramasau tau hi prāṇāpānau cha tau smṛitau, Ahorātrau cha tāveva syāttām tāveva rodasī.⁷

The same meaning is expressed in the Rigveda, the recensions and the brāhmaṇas :

- (a) Dyāvāpṛthivī vā aśvinau.¹
- (b) Ime ha vai dyāvāpṛthivī pratyakshamaśvinau.²
- (c) Ahorātre vā aśvinau.³
- (d) Ṛitā.⁴
- (e) Ṛitāvṛdhā.⁵

Āśvidvaya or nāsatya are the form of truth. They make or cause progress. Yāska has mentioned them as born of the nāsikā as he interprets it as inspiration and expiration personified and identified with the aśvins. These inspiration and expiration are born of the nāsikā or the nose.⁶

The brāhmaṇas term the aśvins as adhvaryu; aśvināvadhvaryū.⁷ The Nirukta has termed the two aśvins as the two sacred sovereigns; the adhvaryu of a nation is the commander of the army and head of the state. *Rājānau*⁸ and *nṛipatī*⁸ are used for the aśvins in the Rigveda. All these meanings imply all pervasiveness and if the meaning is not accepted, the meaning of the hymns cannot be understood. It is, therefore, evident that meaning of the hymns in the brāhmaṇas is the only correct meaning. Yāska has accepted the explanations given in the brāhmaṇas. These European writers who call the explanations as available in the brāhmaṇas or the Nirukta as imaginary are themselves far from the truth.

G. Another example wherein Macdonell and other interpreters of the Veda have failed to grasp its meaning is : kasmai devāya havishā vidhema. The word kah has been interpreted as prajāpati not only in the brāhmaṇas but also in the readings from the brāhmaṇas and in Maitrāyaṇī and other recensions., as :

(a) Kantvāya kāyo yadvai tadvaruṇagrihitābhyah kamabhavattasmātkāyah. Prajāpatirvai kah. Prajāpatirvai tāh prajā varuṇenāgrāhyadyatkāya ātmana evainā varuṇānmunchati.¹

(b) Kantvāya kāyo yadvā ābhyastadvaruṇagrihitābhyah. Kamabhavattasmātkāyah. Prajāpatirvai tāh prajā varuṇenāgrāhayatprajāpatih kah. Ātmanaivainā varuṇānmunchati.²

In these references kah is interpreted as prajāpati as personified sukha or virtue or piety. The phrase nākah in the Rigveda further explains it.³ Grammatically the interpretation of kasmai, according to some scholars, as sukhasvarūpāya prajāpataye is incorrect. But Ashṭādhyāyī helps to tide over this hurdle as well. Sarvanāmnah smai,⁴ here clarifies that smai suffix is used with pronouns only and kasmai is a pronoun and not a proper name.⁵

Rules of grammar for the language of the common people are not applicable to the Veda. The phrase viśva is ordinarily a pronoun but in the Rigveda viśvāya, viśvāt and viśve.⁶ the three different forms of this word are suffixes for nouns only. Even nouns are used as suffixes in the Rigveda as : yadindrāgni paramasyām prithivyām madhyamasyāmavamasyāmuta sthah.⁷ In this hymn paramasyām, madhya- masyām and avamasyām are nouns and pronoun suffixes are used with them. Similarly, if kah meaning Prajāpati has the suffix smāi and the brāhmaṇas interpret it as a noun, it is definitely correct. Śaṅkara in his bhāṣya of tenth śloka of Viṣṇu-sahasra-nāma writes : hiranyagarbha ityashṭau mantrāḥ. Kasmāi devāyetyatra ekāralopenaikadaivatapratipādakāḥ,¹ i. e., in these hymns e prefix of kasmāi has been dropped and as ekasmāi it means the only supreme God. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara similarly interprets it.² In order to belittle the Veda, its meta-physical importance, these scholars translated it as, 'to what god should we offer worship with oblation.' The word kasmāi has not been wrongly interpreted in the brāhmaṇas, but all these scholars have misunderstood the correct meaning.

Patañjali while commenting on the aphorism kasyeta also elaborates our view point : sarvasya hi sarvanāma saṁjñā kṛiyate. Sarvaścha prajāpatih. Prajāpatiścha kah.³

Likewise, the word hiranyapāṇi and its meaning in the brāhmaṇa has not been understood by Macdonell. The word has an allegorical reference like many other words : triśīrsha tvāshṭra, dadhyam ātharvaṇa, rudra etc. A careful analytical study of the literature will help understand its correct implication.

H. The gap between the revelation of the hymns and the original brāhmaṇas is not long. After the revelation of the hymns to the seers, Brahmā and other sages had started expounding the brāhmaṇas. Their explanations of the hymns in the brāhmaṇas continued to be preserved in the successive dynasties of the sages. Additions were also made to the original material and the final compilation was completed during the Mahābhārata period. Therefore, the gap cannot be of a longer duration.

3 सर्वस्य हि सर्वनाम संज्ञा क्रियते । सर्वश्च प्रजापतिः । प्रजापतिश्च कः, 4.2.25

The philological evidence is not tenable. The gāthās in the brāhmaṇas are in the language of the common man. The same seers who had propounded the brāhmaṇas had also written on dharma-śāstra etc. as discussed earlier.¹ A thorough study of our vast literature is the desideratum as the language differs from subject to subject.

To conclude, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa clearly states that : yatharaktathā brāhmaṇam,² i. e., the brāhmaṇa has the same as the ṛichā; and yathaiva yajustathā bandhuh,³ i. e., the idea expressed in the brāhmaṇa is the same as expressed in the hymn from the Yajurveda.

Svāmī Dayānanda Sarasvatī has the apt reference in his advertisement of his translation of the Veda as :

Idam vedabhāshyamapūrvam bhavati, Mahāvidushāmāryyāṇām pūrvajānām yathāvadvedārthavidāmāptānāmātmakānām dharmmātmānām sarvalokopakārabuddhinām śrotriyaṇām brāhmanishṭhānām paramayoginām brahmādivyāsaparyantānām munyṛishināmeshām kṛitīnām sanātānānām vedāṅgānāmaitareyaśatapathasāmagopatha - brāhmaṇapūrvamīmāṃsādisāstropavedopanishachchhākhāntaramūlavedādisatyāśāstrāṇām vachanapramāṇasaṃgrahalekhayojanena pratyakshādi pramāṇayuktyā cha sahaiva rachyate hyatah.⁴

Inter-polation in the Brāhmaṇas

Yājñikadeva in his commentary on Kātyāyana-śrauta-sūtra writes about the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : idam brāhmaṇavākya dharmaviruddham or kenachidatra prakshiptam syāt,⁵ i. e., the reading in this brāhmaṇa regarding Yājñavalkya expressing a desire to eat the meat of a calf is against the dharma and has to be treated as an interpolation. This is one of the examples; the readings in the brāhmaṇas are at times corrupt, or have been lost or have inter-polations.

The printed editions of the brāhmaṇas have a large number of corrupt readings. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa it is stated : sauryā vā etā devatā yannividah.¹ Here devatayā reading instead of devatā is nearer to the style in the brāhmaṇas. A few similar readings are :

- (a) Aindro vai devatayā kshatriyo bhavati.²
- (b) Āgneyo vai devatayā kshatriyo dikshito bhavati.³
- (c) Prājāpatyo hyesha devatayā yad droṇakalaśah.⁴

Another reading in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa is : yām paryastamiyādabhyudiyāditi sā tithih.⁵ The Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa has a variant reading of the same as : yām paryastamayamutsarpediti sā sthitih.⁶ Readings in Gopatha Brāhmaṇa 3.3, uttara-bhāga and Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, 3.7, differ. The edition of the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa printed from Leyden has many mistakes in spite of the best efforts of its editor.

A comparative study of Gopatha Brāhmaṇa and Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa brings forth many variations : Amṛitam vai praṇavah⁷ in the former is amṛitam vai prāṇah⁸ in the latter. The reading prāṇah appears to be more correct. Similarly, apsu vai marutah śītah⁹ in the latter is read as apsu vai marutah śrītāh¹⁰ in the former. Here, also, the reading śrītā in the latter is correct.

THEIR HELP TO UNDERSTAND THE VEDA

The Taittiriya and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇas have the following two readings :

- (a) Ayasmayena charuṇā tṛitīyāmāhutim juhōti. Āyasyo vai prajāh.¹
- (b) Ayasmayena kamaṇḍalunā tṛitīyām. Āhutim juhōti. Āyāsyō vai prajāh.²

Ayāsyah in the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa is a corrupt reading. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara and Sāyaṇa accepting the corrupt reading try to explain it by imagining that ayāsyā was a ṛishi. Ayāsyā ṛishi is not implied with reference to the context. The reference is to iron and the reading of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa appears to be correct.

While reading the brāhmaṇas and taking their help in understanding the Vedas, it is essential to analyse them with reference to the context and compare them with similar readings in the other brāhmaṇas and also take the help of Vedic Koshas etc.

CHAPTER NINE

BASIS OF THE SARVĀNUKRAMANĪS

The basis of the Sarvānukramaṇīs are the brāhmaṇas; being the basis for the meaning of the Veda. The seers of the mantras or the hymns, their devatās and the metres are all contained in the brāhmaṇas. The ṛishis had prepared the Sarvānukramaṇīs, from the various brāhmaṇas. It is mentioned in the Ārsheya Brāhmaṇa :

Athāpi brāhmaṇam bhavati—Yo ha vā aviditārshēyachchhandodaivata-brāhmaṇena mantreṇa yājayati vādhyāpayati vā sthāṇum varchhati gartam vā padyati.....¹

i. e., on this point the brāhmaṇa has the evidence—‘he who performs a sacrifice with a hymn or teaches a hymn without knowing its ṛishi, metre, devatā or brāhmaṇa, breaks his head against the stump of a dried tree or falls into a pit. The knowledge of all these was essential to understand the Veda.

Venkaṭa Mādhava writes in the anukramaṇī of the first chapter of the fifth ashṭaka :

Nanu cha brāhmaṇe sāmnam ṛishayaśchāpi darśitāh, arthavāde cha sarveshām yatśāṭyāyanakam viduh.²

1 अथापि ब्राह्मणं भवति—यो ह वा अविदितार्षेयच्छन्दोदैवतब्राह्मणेन मन्त्रेण याजयति वाध्यापयति वा स्थाणुं वर्छति गर्तं वा पद्यति.....1.1

2 ननु च ब्राह्मणे साम्नां ऋषयश्चापि दर्शिताः । अर्थवादे च सर्वेषां यत्शाट्यायनकं विदुः ॥

A similar inference is deducible from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

Prajāpatih prathamām chitimapaśyat. Prajāpatireva tasyā ārsheyam..... sa yo haitadevam chitināmārsheyam vedārsheyavatyo hāsyā bandhumatyaśchitayo bhavanti.¹

i. e., Prajāpati saw the first theme. Prajāpati is its ṛishi. He, who like this knows the ṛishis of themes, his themes are of ṛishis and bandhus. Prajāpati, as such, is the ṛishi of the first theme and these are contained in the brāhmaṇas.

Sarvānukramaṇis of Rigveda, Sāmaveda and Atharvaveda appear to be older than that of Yajurveda. Āchārya Uvaṭa, the follower of Yajurveda, writes in the beginning of his bhāṣhya :

Gurutastarkataśchaiva tathā śatapathaśruteh, ṛishīn vakshyāmi mantrāṇam devatāśchchhandasam cha yat.²

i.e., based on the knowledge from the teacher, by reasoning and on the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the ṛishi, devatā and metres of the hymns will be described. If Uvaṭa had with him the Sarvānukramaṇi of Yajurveda, he need not have stated that I will mention ṛishis from Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. He had to depend on this brāhmaṇa for the ṛishis of the hymns of Yajurveda.

The authors of the Sarvānukramaṇis had borrowed material from some of the followidg sources :

(a) It is mentioned in Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā : uduttamam varuṇa pāsamasmat iti śunaśśepo vā etāmājigartirvaruṇagrihito apaśyat.³ According to Rik-sarvānukramaṇi of Kātyāyana, Ājigarti Śunahśepa is the ṛishi of 1.24 of Rigveda, which is the 15th hymn of that sūkta.

(b) Again it is mentioned in Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā : agastyasyaitatsūktam kayāśubhīyam, i. e., Agastya is the ṛishi of kayāśubhīya sūkta of

1 प्रजापतिः प्रथमं चित्तिमपश्यत् । प्रजापतिरेव तस्या आर्षेयं.....स यो हैतदेवं चित्तिनामार्षेयं वेदार्षेयवत्यो हास्य बन्धुमत्यश्चित्तयो भवन्ति, 6.2.3.10

Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā 9. 18. This sūkta of fifteen richās is 1.165 in the Rigveda and its ṛishi is Agastya in Sarvānukramaṇi.¹

(c) Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā has another reference : ayam so agnih ityetadviśvāmitrasya sūktam,² i. e., Viśvāmitra is the ṛishi of sūkta 3.22 of the Rigveda. Riksarvānukramaṇi also mentions the same ṛishi.

(d) Another reference in the Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā is : Sa vāmadeva ukhyamagnimabibhastamavaikshata sa etatsūktamapaśyat—kṛiṇuśva pājah prasitim na pṛithvīm iti.³ Vāmadeva ṛishi of sūkta 4.4 is also mentioned in Rik-sarvānukramaṇi.

(e) It is mentioned in Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa : etatkavashah sūktamapaśyatpanchadaśarcham—pra devatrā brahmaṇe gātoretu iti.⁴ Kavasha Ailusha is the ṛishi of sūkta 10.38 of Rigveda and is mentioned in the Sarvānukramaṇi also.

(f) It is stated in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa : Janishṭhā ugrah sahase turāya, iti.....gaurivītirha vai śāktyo.....etatsūktamapaśyat.⁵ Śāktya Gaurivīti is the ṛishi of sūkta 10.73 of Rigveda as mentioned in the Sarvānukramaṇi also.

(g) Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa states : atha sarparājñā riḡbhirupatishṭhate. Ayam gauh priśnirakramīt.....⁶ In the Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā it is written : sarparājñyā riḡbhisstuyuh.⁷ Hari Svāmī in his commentary writes :...sarpāṇām rājñī sarpa-rājñī. Sarpāṇām mātā kadrūh. Tasyā etā richah,⁸ i.e., these richās are of Kadru, the mother of sarpas. Rik Sarvānukramaṇi mentions this sūkta 10.189 of Sarparājñi.

(i) It is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : vi na indra mṛidho jahi. Mṛigo na bhīmah kucharo girishṭhāh iti vaimṛidhī-bhyām.....³ The ṛishi of the two ṛichās 10.152.4 and 10.180.2 is Vimṛidha—Indra. In the Rik Sarvānukramaṇi their devatā is Indra.

(j) It is also mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : vaiśvānaro na ūtaye. Prishṭho divi, prishṭho agnih pṛithivyām. Iti vaiśvānarā-bhyām,⁴ i.e., the two ṛichās are of Vaiśvānara devatā. The second ṛichā is 1.98.2 of the Rigveda. Its devatā is Vaiśvānara in the Sarvā-nukramaṇi.

A few examples are given; similarly the metres are also borrowed by the authors of the anukramaṇis from the brāhmaṇas. The brāhmaṇas contain all the possible material for the explanation of the Veda.

CHAPTER TEN

THE COMMENTATORS

A. Aitareya Brāhmaṇa 1. Bhaṭṭa Govinda Svāmī (11th–12th Century A.D.)

Śrī Kṛishṇa Līlā Śukamuni in his bhāshya called Purushakāra on Daivam writes on Kārikā 198 :

Tathā cha bahvrichabrahmaṇam—‘Pravalhikāh śamsati. Pravalhikābhirvai devā asurān pravalyāthainānātyāyan iti. (6.33, AB.) Vyākṛitam chaitat Govindasvāminā—pravalhikāh prahelikāh...iti.¹ Here, Kṛishṇa Līlā Śukamuni has referred to Govinda Svāmī, as commentator of Aitareya Brāhmaṇa Mādhava in his Dhātu-vṛitti, remembers Govinda Svāmī by quoting the above reference from Purushakāra.² The reading by Mādhava is clear and better.

Govinda Svāmī is mentioned by Shadguru-śishya also.³ Govinda Svāmī refers to Ashṭādhyāyī Vṛitti in his commentary on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. In his vṛitti on 7.3.62, he writes : vṛittikārau varṇayāmchakāra.⁴

1 तथा च बह्वृचब्राह्मणम्—प्रवल्हिकाः शंसति । प्रवल्हिकाभिर्वै देवा असुरान् प्रवल्ह्याथैनानात्यायन् इति । ऐ. ब्रा. 6.33, व्याकृतं चैतत् गोविन्दस्वामिना-प्रवल्हिकाः प्रहेलिकाः...इति ।

4 वृत्तिकारौ वर्णयाम्चकार, 7.3.62

A manuscript of this commentary is preserved in the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras.¹ In the 25th chapter, he refers to Bhaṭṭāchārya or Kumārila. Possibly, the same Govinda Svāmī had written his commentary called Baudhāyana-dharma-vivarāṇa on Baudhāyana-dharma-sūtra. He refers to Bhaṭṭa Kumārila and quotes from Tantra-vārttika in it.² A famous verse from Tantra-vārttika is also quoted by him. He also refers to Vasishṭha-dharma-sūtra-vivarāṇa by Yajña-svāmī. Govinda Svāmī writes in his Baudhāyana-dharma-vivarāṇa: sa cha smārto dharmah panchavidho bhavati. Varṇadharmā āśramadharmo varṇāśramadharmo guṇadharmo nimittadharmāścheti.³ Medhātithi also writes in his commentary : iha panchaprakāro dharmā iti smṛiti vivaraṇakārā prapanchayanti. Varṇadharmā āśramadharmo varṇāśramadharmo naimittiko guṇadharmāścheti.⁴ The two writings are very similar. The commentary by Govinda Svāmī is called Vivarāṇa. Could it be presumed that while commenting on Manusmṛiti, Medhātithi was referring to the Vivarāṇa by Govinda Svāmī? If so, the period of Govinda Svāmī has to be prior to ninth century.

Maskarī also writes in the same strain in his commentary on the sūtras of Gautama : dharmah panchaprakārah-varṇadharmā āśramadharmo guṇadharmo varṇāśramadharmo nimittadharma iti.⁵ Medhātithi while writing the above lines had either Maskarī or both Maskarī and Govinda Svāmī in view.

Govinda Svāmī is mentioned in the two manuscripts of Aitareyaa Bhāshya and Baudhāyana-dharma-vivarāṇa, preserved in

A verse by another Govinda Svāmī is quoted in Śārangadhara Paddhati.³

2. Jaya Svāmī

Raghunandana in the Mala-māsa chapter of his Smṛiti-tattva refers to Jaya Svāmī, a commentator of Āśvalāyana Brāhmaṇa. Since Jaya Svāmī had commented on the brāhmaṇa of Kaṭha recension, this appears to be a mistake. A commentary on Āśvalāyana Brāhmaṇa is nowhere quoted. Jaya Svāmī as a commentator of Aitareya Brāhmaṇa is not referred to anywhere else.

Jayanta Svāmī is a famous commentator on the literature related to the Rigveda. Is Jaya Svāmī a corruption of the name Jayanta Svāmī ? Jayanta Svāmī had written a commentary named Vimalodaya-nāma-mālā on Āśvalāyana-sūtra. Bhaṭṭa Kumārila Svāmī, the author of Āśvalāyana-grihya-kārikā often refers to Jayanta Svāmī. This Bhaṭṭa Kumārila is different from the famous Kumārila Bhaṭṭa and is of a much later date. In the Puṁsavana chapter, he refers to Prayoga-pārijāta. Prayoga-pārijāta also refers to another Kumārila. Vidyāranya and Hemādri are often quoted in Prayoga-pārijāta, which also refers to Jayanta. The period of Prayoga-pārijāta is about 1430 A.D. Harihara also refers to a Jayanta. Possibly, the period of Jayanta is before 1400 A.D. and that of Kumārila about 1430 A.D. Jayanta Svāmī refers to Agniśarmopādhyāya in his Vimalodaya-mālā.

Hemādri quotes a Jaya Svāmī, a commentator on Hārta, in his Śrāddha-kalpa.⁴ Jaya Svāmī was, therefore, also a commentator.

3. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara

Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara, the famous commentator had written his commentary on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, a manuscript of which was available in the Library of D.A.V. College, Lahore and the same after the partition of the country was brought to the Viśveśvarānanda Vedic Śodha Sansthāna, Hoshiarpur, Punjab. He appears to be the same commentator who had his commentary on the Rigveda, as well. The available manuscript has commentary only upto fourteen chapters.

4. Shaḍguru-śishya (Samvat 1200-1250)

Sukha-pradā commentary by Shaḍguru-śishya, on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, has already been published. He writes at the end of his commentary : iti shaḍguruśishyavirachitāyām mahidāsaitareya brāhmaṇavṛittau sukhapradāyām...¹ In the beginning, he writes :

Chātvarīmśākyamadhyāyāśchatvārimśadiheti ḍaṇ, pratāyate tasya vṛittirnāmnā chaishā sukhapradā.
Govindasvāmi kṛishṇādibhāshya dṛishṭārtha bhāshiṇī, nāsyā vṛitterarthavatvamanuktārthopavarṇanāt.²

Vedārtha-dīpikā, a commentary on Sarvānukramaṇī, was written by him in saṃvat 1234. He mentions this date in a verse at the end of his vṛitti :

Khagotyānmesumāyeti kalyaharganane sati, sarvānukramaṇīvṛittirjātā vedārthadīpikā.³

i.e., on the expiry of 1,565,132 days of Kali, this vṛitti or commentary was written. Otherwise in Kali saṃvat 4288 or Vikrama Saṃvat 1234 Shaḍguru-śishya was alive. The same date can be deduced from the internal evidence of his works.

The six teachers of Shaḍguru-śishya were Vināyaka, Śūlapāṇi or Śūlāṅka, Mukunda or Govinda, Vyāsa, Sūrya and Śivayogi. Do these names suggest that he had belonged to Mahārāshṭra? He had also written his commentaries on Aitareya Āraṇyaka, Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra, Āśvalāyana-gṛhya-sūtra and Rik-sarvānukramaṇī. A summary of the last has been published by Macdonell, wherein he refers to the works of authors quoted by Shadguru-śishya. One of these Nārada-stotra is referred to on p. 81. The other name has not been clearly mentioned. On pages 59 and 99 of Vedārtha-dīpikā, it is written respectively : Yātayāmo jirṇe bhuktochchhishte api cha iti Nighaṇṭau,¹ and śamkāvītarka-bhayayoh iti Nighaṇṭu.² Macdonell states that these two references are not traceable in the Nighaṇṭu of Yāska. There used to be other Nighaṇṭus besides that by Yāska. In fact, each lexicon was named Nighaṇṭu. These two references are available in Vaijayanṭi, by Yādava-prakāśa, whose period is saṃvat 1050. Therefore, Shadguru-śishya who refers to him had belonged to the 11th century or even later.

5. Sāyaṇa (Saṃvat 1372-1444)

Sāyaṇa has to be honoured with a privileged position among the commentators on vedic works. His extreme love for vedic literature, its exhaustive study, and on the other hand strengthening the Vijayanagara empire as its Prime Minister represent his varied qualities as scholar-statesman.

Sāyaṇa was the Prime Minister of Bukka I, Kampana, Sangama II, and Harihara II, rulers of Vijayanagara and other states. He writes at the end of each chapter of his commentary on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa :

Iti śrīmadrājādhirāja parameśvara vaidika-dharma-mārga-pravartakavira-Bukkaṇa-sāmraja-dhurandhara Sāyaṇāchārya-kṛitāvaitareya-brāhmaṇa-bhāshye.³.....

i. e., Sāyaṇāchārya had prepared the bhāshya on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa during the reign of king Śrī Bukka, who was a follower of the Vaidika religion.

वीरबुक्कणसाम्राज्यधुरंधर सायणाचार्य

A manuscript of his commentary on the Rigveda is preserved in the Central Library, Baroda.¹ This copy is dated saṃvat 1452, i.e., Sāyaṇa had completed his commentary before that date.

He writes in the beginning of his Subhāṣita-sudhā-nidhi that he was the Minister of Kampa-rāja. He writes in Dhātu-vṛitti, Prāyaścitta-sudhā-nidhi, Tajña-tantra-sudhā-nidhi, and Alaṃkāra-sudhā-nidhi that he was the minister of Saṃgama II. He writes in his commentary on the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa that he was the minister of Harihara II.

Sāyaṇa had died in saṃvat 1444 according to Aufrecht and had lived for seventy two years.² Samvat 1372 could, possibly, be his birth year.

King Harihara II was the son of Bukka I. An inscription of Bukka I, of Śaka 1276 or saṃvat 1411, is available.³ Harihara II was ruling in saṃvat 1434, an inscription of this year has already been published.⁴ Another inscription of Harihara II is dated saṃvat 1456.⁵

A mutilated inscription in grantha characters available in a temple of Kānchipuram reads :

Svasti śrī śrīmāyī janani pitā tava munirbodhāya[no]māyaṇo...shṭho...
bhūṣṇaranujah śrī bhogana[ā]thah kaviḥ svā[mī][saṃ]ga[ma]bhūpa[tih]...pūśrī [ka]ṇṭhanātho gururbhārdvāja[ku]leśa sā[ya]ṇa guṇaisvatta.⁶

i.e., the gotra of Sāyaṇa is Bhāradvāja, his sūtra is Baudhāyana, his mother Śrīmāyī, his father Māyaṇa, his younger brother kavi Bhoganātha, his master Sangama and his teacher is Śrī Kaṇṭhanātha.

Mādhava, the elder brother of Sāyaṇa, writes in his commentary on Parāśara-smṛiti :

Śrīmatī janani yasya sukīrtirmāyaṇah pitā,
Sāyaṇo bhoganāthaścha manobuddhī sahodarau.
Yasya Baudhāyanam sūtram śākhā yasya cha yājushī, bhāradvājakulam yasya sarvajñah sa hi mādhevah.¹

i.e., the mother of Mādhava, is Śrīmayī, his father Māyaṇa, his two younger brothers Sāyaṇa and Bhoganātha, his sūtra Baudhāyana, his śākhā Yājusha, and his gotra Bhāradvāja,

The same inference is drawn from his Alaṃkāra-sudhā-nidhi :

Mahendranmanāniyo mantri Māyaṇa-sāyaṇah,

It is also known from Alaṃkāra-sudhā nidhi that Sāyaṇa had three sons Kampana, Māyaṇa and Śiṅgaṇa. He was the teacher of Śaṅgama during his childhood. He was considered to be an incarnation of Vyāsa. He was a great warrior and had won a victory over Champa-rāja as referred to in the following verse of Alaṃkāra-sudhā-nidhi :

Sāyaṇa refers to earlier commentators as kechana, anya āha, apara āha and kaśchidāha and never refers to them by name.

He was the author of a large number of works, e.g.,

- (a) Dhātu-vṛitti
- (b) Commentaries on Ṛigveda, Kāṇva-Yajurveda, Sāmaveda, Atharvaveda and Taittirīya-saṁhitā.
- (c) Commentaries on Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and eight brāhmaṇas of the Sāma-veda.
- (d) Commentaries on Taittirīya-āraṇyaka and Aitareya-āraṇyaka.
- (e) Aitareya-upanishad-dīpikā.
- (f) Subhāshita-sudhā-nidhi.
- (g) Prāyaścitta-sudhā-nidhi, also known as Karma-vipāka.
- (h) Alamkāra-sudhā-nidhi.
- (i) Purushārtha-sudhā-nidhi.
- (j) Yajña-mantra-sudhā-nidhi

The works by Sāyaṇa could become famous as he had a position of eminence in the Vijayanagara empire.

B. Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa

1. Bhaṭṭa Vināyaka

Bhaṭṭa Vināyaka had written his commentary on Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa. He was the son of Bhaṭṭa Mādhava, a resident of Vṛiddhanagara. Manuscripts of his commentary known as Sadārtha-vimarśani are available.¹ He quotes Kālādarśa in his commentary.² He does not appear to be an early commentator.

2. Mitāksharā Commentary

Manuscript of a commentary called Mitāksharā on the Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa is available at Varanasi.³

C. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa

1. Hari Svāmī (Kali Samvat 3047 or 3740)

A manuscript on the first kāṇḍa or Haviryajña chapter of

¹ Nos. 3650 and 3779, List of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras, 1928; No. 59, List of Manuscripts in Adyar Library, Madras

³ See Aufrecht, p. 132, Vol. 1

Mādhyandina Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa by Hari Svāmī is available in Varanasi. The verses in its beginning are :

Nāgasvāmī tanna (ptā) Śriguhasvāmī-nandanah, tatra yājī pramāṇajña āḍhyo lakshmyā samedhitah.
Tannandano Harisvāmī prasphuradvedavedimān,

Yah samrāt kṛitavān saptasomasamsthāstatharkkaśrutim, vyākhyā(m) kṛitvādhyāpayanmām Śrīskandasvāmyasti me guruh.¹

i. e., Hari Svāmī was the son of Nāga Svāmī and grandson of Guha Svāmī. His teacher Skanda Svāmī, had taught him after completion of his commentary on the Rigveda.

At the end of this chapter Hari Svāmī writes about his period :

Yadābdānām kalerjagmuh sapta-trinśata śatāni vai, chatvārīṅsat-samāśchānyāstadā bhāshyamidam kṛitam.²

i.e., the commentary was prepared when 3740 years of Kali had passed. A few scholars interpret it as 3047 years of Kali-yuga. In their opinion sapta is a separate pada. Hari Svāmī has also mentioned that Vikrama, king of Avanti, was ruling at that time. Vikrama, as a ruler of Avanti or Ujjain, in Kali-yuga 3740 or Vikrama Samvat 695, is not mentioned in history. He has mentioned this fact in the following verses at the end of the chapters of this manuscript :

Nāgasvāmī suto avantyām pārāśaryo vasan harih, śrutyartham darśayāmāsa śaktitah paūshkarīyakah.
Śrīmato avantināthasya Vikramārkasya bhūpateh, Dharmādhyaksho Harisvāmī vyākhyāchchhātapatthi śrutim.³

i.e., Hari Svāmī who was of Parāśara gotra, son of Nāga Svāmī, resident of Pushkara and Chief Justice of Vikramārka, king of Avanti, had composed his bhāshya on Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.

2. Uvaṭa (saṃvat 1100)

Uvaṭa had composed his bhāshya on Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa; but manuscripts of the same are not available.¹ He writes at the end of his bhāshya on the Tajurveda :

Ānandapuravāstavya-vajraṭākhyasya sūnūnā,
Uvaṭena kṛitam bhāshyam padavākyaiah suniśchitaih.
Rishyādīnścha namaskṛitya avantyāmuvaṭo avasan, mantrāṇām kṛitavānbhāshyam mahīm Bhoje praśāsati.²

i.e., Uvaṭa, son of Vajraṭa, and resident of Ānandapura in Gujarat had completed his bhāshya on the mantras while staying in Avanti during the reign of king Bhoja. These verses are repeated with slight variations at the end of other chapters. In a manuscript from Baroda of saṃvat 1464, it is written :

Ānandapura-vāstavya-vajraṭākhyasya sūnūnā, mantrabhāshyamidam kṛiptam Bhoje prithvīm praśāsati.³

At the end of the tenth chapter of the manuscript of saṃvat 1431 from Poona, it is written :

Rishyādīnścha namaskṛitya hyavantyā Uvaṭo vasan, mantra-bhāshyamidam chakre Bhoje rājyam praśāsati.⁴

In the edition of this bhāshya, published from Varanasi, it is written at the end of the 13th chapter :

Ānandapura-vāstavya-Vajraṭasya cha sūnuna,
Uvaṭena kṛitam bhāshyamujjayinyām sthitena tu.

It is evident that he had composed this bhāshya during the reign of king Bhoja, whose period is saṃvat 1075-1117. Uvaṭa had, therefore, completed his commentary near about saṃvat 1100.

His name is mentioned also as Uṇṇa. He was a Nāgara-brāhmaṇa. Ānandapura is in Gujarat. Vajraṇa was his father. He had also composed his bhāṣya on Īśāvāsyopanishad at the end of which it is written that his father Vajraṇa was an Upādhyāya :

Iti śrīmadvajraṇa-bhaṭṭopādhyāyātmajasakalanigamavichchūdāmaṇi śrīmaduṇṇabhaṭṭāryavirachite.....chatvārīṇśattamodhyāyah.¹

The available works by Uṇṇa are :

- (a) Commentary on Yajurveda.
- (b) Commentary on Yajuh-prātiśākhya.
- (c) Commentary on Ṛik-prātiśākhya.
- (d) Commentary on Ṛik-sarvānukramaṇi. It is still uncertain whether Uṇṇa was the writer of this work.

Śatrughna, Mahīdhara and other writers have taken help from his commentary on the Yajurveda.

3. Sāyaṇa (samvat 1372-1444)

Sāyaṇa had composed his commentary on Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa also. Its kāṇḍas 1-3, 5-7 and 9 have been published from Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta.

4. Kavīndrāchārya

A commentary by Kavīndrāchārya on Ushā-sambharaṇa or sixth kāṇḍa of Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is available in Bikaner.² Rajendra Lal Mitra appears to have made a mistake in mentioning the name of the commentator. This name is of the Library and not of the commentator, who is none other than Hari Svāmī himself.

D. Kāṇva Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa

1. Nīlakaṇṭha

Nīlakaṇṭha had composed his commentary on the Kāṇva Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. In his commentary on a verse of the Mahābhārata, he writes :

Suryāmāsā vicharantā divi, iti mantravarṇanāt. Suryāmāsā suryāchandra-masāvityarthah. Nipuṇataramupapāditametadasmābhih Kāṇva-śatapatha-bhāṣhye Ekapādi kāṇḍe.³

Caland has written that there are two divisions of this brāhmaṇa.¹ In its northern version available near Varanasi, the name of the first kāṇḍa is ekapāt. In the southern version, the name is ekavāyī. Nīlakaṇṭha mentions the name as ekapādi. Possibly, Nīlakaṇṭha appears to have belonged to the region near about Varanasi. He may have lived about 600 years earlier.

2. Anantāchārya

Anantāchārya, a commentator of Kāṇva Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, was the son of Nāgadeva Bhaṭṭa.²

E. Maṇḍala Brāhmaṇa

1. Nārāyaṇendra Sarasvatī

Maṇḍala Brāhmaṇa forms part of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. A manuscript of the bhāṣya by Nārāyaṇendra Sarasvatī on this brāhmaṇa is mentioned to be available in Baroda.³ This bhāṣya is named as Pandita-maṇḍana-bhāṣya.

F. Piṇḍa Brāhmaṇa

Kṛishṇa Miśra has written his commentary Śrāddha-Kāśikā in saṃvat 1505 on Kātyāyana śrāddha-sūtra. In the second kaṇḍikā, he writes :

Piṇḍabrāhmaṇa-bhāṣyakāro api—atha nīvimudvṛhiya namaskarotīti kaṇḍikā—vyākhyāne nābherdakṣiṇata eva nīvisthānamityaṃamsta.⁴

i. e., while commenting on nīvim (Mādhyandina Śatapatha, 2.4.2.24), the commentator of Piṇḍa Brāhmaṇa accepts that nīvi is to be placed to the right of the navel in the body. This reference is not traceable in the commentary by Sāyaṇa. Kṛishṇa Miśra, appears to refer, here, to some brāhmaṇa not available, so far.

Vākyaṛthaikaparāṇyadhitya cha Bhavasvāmīyādibhāshyāṇyato,

i. e., on going through the bhāshya of Bhava Svāmī, in which only the translation is given, I am preparing this commentary comprising of all the aspects. Bhava Svāmī had preceded Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara. Burnell places Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara in the tenth century. Bhava Svāmī, therefore, was earlier than the tenth century.

Keśava Svāmī has also referred to Bhava Svāmī in his Baudhāyana - Prayoga-sāra : Nārāyaṇādibhiḥ prayogakārairekam pakṣhamāśritya darśapūrṇamāsādīnām prayoga uktah. Āchāryai pādaiḥ dvaidhe pakṣhāntarāṇyuktāni. Bhavasvāmīmatānusāriṇā mayā tu ubhayamapyañgīkṛitya prayoga-sārah kṛiyate,² i. e., Nārāyaṇa, and others have depended only on one view. Āchāryapāda has given two views. I am writing Prayoga-sāra, mentioning these two views following Bhava Svāmī.

Keśava Svāmī is mentioned in Trikāṇḍa-maṇḍana, which is of eleventh century. Kaṇe has written, 'Trikāṇḍa Maṇḍana, who flourished before 1100 A. D.³ Keśava Svāmī had definitely preceded him.

Nārāyaṇa. referred to by Keśava Svāmī depends on Baudhāyana-sūtra. He on the other hand refers to Gopāla; paśchārdhāt pūrvārdhādvadāyeti gopālah.⁴ Keśava Svāmī also refers to Gopāla-kārikā in which Bhava Svāmī is referred to. He is the same Gopāla who, in his Baudhāyana-kārikā, refers to Bhava Svāmī as : iti davidhoditāḥ pakṣhā bhavasvāmīmatānugāḥ.⁵

Keśava Svāmī is quoted by Rāmāgnichitta or Aṇḍāra in Āpa-stamba-śrauta-vṛitti.¹ Rāmāṇḍāra quotes Bhava Svāmī in the same work.² The inter-relation is explicit as :

A line from Bhava Svāmī is quoted in Kutūhala-Vṛitti.³ Śrī Nivāsa, author of Bhāvanā-purushottama-nāṭaka, was the son of Bhava Svāmī, who was also the author of Baudhāyana-śrauta-sūtra-vivarāṇa.⁴ He had written his commentaries on Taittirīya-saṃhitā, Taittirīya-brāhmaṇa and Baudhāyana-śrauta-sūtra. Manuscripts of his Śrauta-vivarāṇa are available in the various libraries. A Nārada-smṛiti-bhāṣya by Bhava Svāmī is also available.

Bhava Svāmī appears to have been a famous author and flourished probably, before the eighth century.

2. Kauśika Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra

Max Muller in his introduction to the edition of Rigveda writes : Sāyaṇa has referred to Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara;⁵ these references were probably borrowed by Sāyaṇa from his Taittirīya-bhāṣyas. Max Muller had written in 1874. Vāmana Śāstri who edited Rudrādhyāya in 1906 with commentaries of Sāyaṇa and Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara wrote in its introduction : Bhaṭṭa bhāskaroyam Mādhavāchāryāṇna prāchīna iti tu niśc-hitameveti,⁶ i. e., Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara is not earlier than Mādhavāchārya.

Bhāskara in his commentary on Rudrādhyāya has taken extensive help from Rudra-bhāṣya contained in Śiva-rahasya, which differs from

bhāshyam sarvapaṭhīnametadadhunā sarvīyamārabhyate.¹

i. e., on going through the bhāshya of Bhava Svāmī, in which only the translation is given, I am preparing this commentary comprising of all the aspects. Bhava Svāmī had preceded Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara. Burnell places Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara in the tenth century. Bhava Svāmī, therefore, was earlier than the tenth century.

Keśava Svāmī has also referred to Bhava Svāmī in his Baudhāyana - Prayoga-sāra : Nārāyaṇādibhiḥ prayogakārairekam pakṣamāśritya darśapūrṇamāśādīnām prayoga uktah. Āchāryai pādaiḥ dvaidhe pakṣhāntarāṇyuktāni. Bhavasvāmīmatānusāriṇā mayā tu ubhayamapyaṅgīkṛitya prayoga-sārah kṛiyate,² i. e., Nārāyaṇa, and others have depended only on one view. Āchāryapāda has given two views. I am writing Prayoga-sāra, mentioning these two views following Bhava Svāmī.

Keśava Svāmī is mentioned in Trikāṇḍa-maṇḍana, which is of eleventh century. Kaṇe has written, 'Trikāṇḍa Maṇḍana, who flourished before 1100 A. D.³ Keśava Svāmī had definitely preceded him.

Nārāyaṇa, referred to by Keśava Svāmī depends on Baudhāyana-sūtra. He on the other hand refers to Gopāla; paśchārdhāt pūrvārdhādvadāyati gopālah.⁴ Keśava Svāmī also refers to Gopāla-kārikā in which Bhava Svāmī is referred to. He is the same Gopāla who, in his Baudhāyana-kārikā, refers to Bhava Svāmī as : iti davidhoditāḥ pakṣhā bhavasvāmīmatānugāḥ.⁵

Keśava Svāmī is quoted by Rāmāgnichitta or Aṇḍāra in Āpa-stamba-śrauta-vṛitti.¹ Rāmāṇḍāra quotes Bhava Svāmī in the same work.² The inter-relation is explicit as :

A line from Bhava Svāmī is quoted in Kutūhala-Vṛitti.³ Śrī Nivāsa, author of Bhāvanā-purushottama-nāṭaka, was the son of Bhava Svāmī, who was also the author of Baudhāyana-śrauta-sūtra-vivarana.⁴ He had written his commentaries on Taittirīya-saṁhitā, Taittirīya-brāhmaṇa and Baudhāyana-śrauta-sūtra. Manuscripts of his Śrauta-vivarana are available in the various libraries. A Nārada-smṛiti-bhāṣya by Bhava Svāmī is also available.

Bhava Svāmī appears to have been a famous author and flourished probably, before the eighth century.

2. Kauśika Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra

Max Muller in his introduction to the edition of Rigveda writes : Sāyaṇa has referred to Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara;⁵ these references were probably borrowed by Sāyaṇa from his Taittirīya-bhāṣyas. Max Muller had written in 1874. Vāmana Śāstri who edited Rudrādhyāya in 1906 with commentaries of Sāyaṇa and Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara wrote in its introduction : Bhaṭṭa bhāskaroyam Mādhavāchāryāṇna prāchīna iti tu niśchitameveti,⁶ i. e., Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara is not earlier than Mādhavāchārya.

Bhāskara in his commentary on Rudrādhyāya has taken extensive help from Rudra-bhāṣya contained in Śiva-rahasya, which differs from the Śiva-rahasya-khaṇḍa of Skanda. Jñāna-yajñe is written very often at its end. Its manuscript is preserved in Tanjore and Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra is its author.

Śāma Śāstri, in his introduction to the second ashtaka of Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa with commentary of Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara, writes :

“Sa kṛistābdānām panchadaśaśatakasyānte prāyeṇa samāsīditi sambhāvya-

i. e., Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara belongs to the end of the fifteenth century as referred to by Bhāskara himself as Nishpāvaka śāke means 1420 Śaka. The commentary by Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara is only a translation of the commentary by Sāyaṇa. On the other hand, it has to be stated that Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara had preceded Sāyaṇa. Five references from Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara are borrowed in the commentary on the Rigveda by Sāyaṇa. Three of these could be traced in the commentaries of Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara :

1. RV	1.63.4	Sāyaṇa	parāchairityetadavyayam nīchairuch- chairiti vadati Bhaṭṭa-Bhāskara- Miśrah.

The fourth reference quoted by Sāyaṇa in his commentary on 7.1.7 appears to have been taken from the fourth kāṇḍa of Taittiriya-saṁhitā. Devarāja Yajvā in his commentary on Nighaṇṭu 2.14.37 quotes it from Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara whose commentary on the fourth kāṇḍa of Taittiriya-saṁhitā is not available, so far. The fifth reference is also not traceable in the available works by Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara, who having been quoted by Sāyaṇa and his quotations being traceable in Sāyaṇa's works clearly place him prior to Sāyaṇa.

Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara had preceded Devarāja Yajvā, who also had preceded Sāyaṇa. Sāyaṇa quotes from Nighaṇṭu in his commentary on Rigveda as : iti nighaṇṭu-bhāshye.² This quotation is traceable in the commentary by Devarāja Yajvā. It has been the tradition of writers to quote from earlier writers. In that case, Sāyaṇa might have borrowed from some other Nighaṇṭu, as well. However, Devarāja Yajvā in his introduction to his commentary refers to all the preceding commentators; but does not quote or refers to Sāyaṇa or Mādhava. Therefore, he had, possibly, preceded Sāyaṇa. Devarāja Yajvā very often quotes Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara in his commentary on the Nighaṇṭu :

1. NI	1.1.19	Devarāja	Sarvārtha poshaṇāt pūshā iti Bhaṭṭa-bhāskara-miśrah.

4.	NI	1.11.24	Devarāja	Bhaṭṭa-bhāskara-miśra.....svayam sarasvatī āha brūte. Svaiva te vāgi- tyabravīt iti brāhmaṇam.
	TS	1.1.3	Bhāskara	Svāhā svayameva sarasvatī āha brūte. Svaiva te vāgityabravīt. Ityādi brāhmaṇam.

These references help to place Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara as prior to Devarāja Yajvā.

Ātmānanda, who had preceded Sāyaṇa, in his commentary on the Asya-vāmiya-sūktā refers to Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara as a commentator on the Veda in his introduction.

Internal evidence further throws light on his date. Commenting on 1.8.10 of Taittirīya-saṁhitā, he writes : Tasmādimamāmushyāyaṇam Simhavarmanah putram Nandivarmānam.....suvadhvam.¹ Names of two other rulers are mentioned in Taittirīya-saṁhitā 1.8.11 : Rāja Simha Varmā and Rājendra Varmā.

He further mentions : ayam cha yajamānah asau Narasimha-Varmā āmushyāyaṇah Rājendravarmanō apatyamiti.....piturnāma grihyate, Rājendrāyaṇa iti yathā.² Commenting on 2.3.1 and 2.3.4 of the same, he mentions the name of king Vira Simha Varmā. These rulers mentioned by him ought to have preceded him.

Burnell contradicts Śāma Śāstri and writes that Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara was a Telugu brāhmaṇa, who mentions the names of plants in place of their family names and 'nishpāvake Śake' means Anumula Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara. The meaning by Śāma Śāstri of the phrase appears to be an imagination.

Further evidence is available to determine his date :

(a) Viśveśvara Bhaṭṭa or Māndhātā quotes Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara in his Mahārṇava : iti Taittirīya śākhānusāreṇa chamakānuvākāḥ. छ. Atha namakairavāntaravākyaṇām prayogah. Bhāskarādivinirdiṣṭabhāshyaḍṛiṣṭah.¹

(b) Sāyaṇa has quoted Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra as stated above.

(c) Devarāja Yajvā also quotes Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra as written above.

(d) Vedānta-deśika, a contemporary of Sāyaṇa, refers to Vedāchārya who was also known as Lakshmaṇa and was the author of Sudarśana-mīmāṃsā.² The date of Vedāchārya is earlier than saṃvat 1300. He was a contemporary of king Vallāla. He writes :

(1) Tathā bhāshyakṛitā Bhaṭṭa-bhāskara-miśreṇa jñānayaajñākhye bhāshye etatprāṇavyākhyānasamaye charaṇamiti devatā-viśeṣa iti tadanugūṇameva vyākhyātam.³

(2) Evam Yajurved-bhāshyeshu kadaivatyatvaṁ pravargyottaraśāntyanuvādakatvaṁ jñānayaajñādishu hoturājñe viniyogādnidāivatyatvaṁ.⁴

Vedāchārya, therefore, had extensive knowledge of the Jñānayaajña bhāshya of Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra.

(e) Śrī-kaṇṭha, the commentator on Vedānta-sūtra, was familiar with the commentary on Taittirīya Āraṇyaka by Bhaṭṭa-Bhāskara Miśra who writes : saishā muktānāmīśvarasya cha sākshā-darthakriyāhetuh paramparayā tvanyeshām.¹ Śrī-kaṇṭha in his commentary similarly writes : paraśaktirhi brahmaṇah svarūpatayā paramākāśa uchyate yā muktānām parameśvarasya cha sākshādarthakriyāhetuh paramparayānyeshām.² Their works have many more similarities. Śrī-kaṇṭha was a contemporary of Rāmānuja.

(f) Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara has referred to Āryabhaṭṭiya,³ Amara-kośa,⁴ and *Kāśikā*⁵ which means he was posterior to the 8th century.

(g) Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara mentions in his bhāṣya of Taittirīya-saṃhitā that the mantras of Ekāgni-kāṇḍa are a part of the Taittirīyas. He had commented on them. Hara Datta in his commentary on Āpastamba-grihya-sūtra refers to the Ekāgnikāṇḍa-bhāṣya by Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara as : tatra vaiśvadeve somāya svāheti dvitīyāhutiriti mantra-vyākhyākāreṇostam.⁶ The date of Hara Datta is about Vikrama samvat 12th century. Śrīnivāsāchārya writes that Hara Datta had taken extensive help from Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara.⁷

All this evidence suggests that the date of Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara has to be Vikrama samvat eleventh century. Burnell had correctly stated the tradition.

3. Rāmāṇḍāra = Rāmāgnichitta

It is stated in Trikāṇḍa-maṇḍana :

i.e., Karka calls him Durbrāhmaṇa and the commentator of mantra-Brāhmaṇa accepts this view point. The commentator of Trikāṇḍa-maṇḍana writes : mantra-brāhmaṇa bhāṣyakṛita Rāmāṇḍārah. It appears that Rāmāgnichitta had composed his bhāṣhya on Taittirīya-saṁhitā and the brāhmaṇa. Rāmāṇḍāra had written a commentary on the Āpastamba-śrauta-sūtra by Dhūrta Svāmī. In the beginning of this vṛitti, he writes :

Āpastambam namaskṛitya Dhūrtavśāmi prasādatah,

Kauśikena tu Rāmeṇa śraddhāmātravijrīmḥhitah,

i. e., paying my homage to Āpastamba and with the blessings of Dhūrta Svāmī, a vṛitti on his commentary is prepared. Rāma of Kauśika gotra, full of veneration prepares the meaning of the Veda. A manuscript of this bhāṣhya is not available, so far.

4. Sāyaṇa(Vikrama Saṁvat 1372-1444)

Sāyaṇa had written his commentary on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, which is already published.

H. Tāṁḍya Brāhmaṇa

1. Jaya Svāmī

Jaya Svāmī, son of Hari Svāmī, had composed his bhāṣhya on Tāṁḍya Brāhmaṇa called as Pancha-vimśārtha-mālā.²

Harisvāmīsutenaśyām daśāhah parisamsthitah.

A manuscript of it is available in Alvar. Peterson mentions it as Tāṁḍya Brāhmaṇa Bhāṣhya Tikā and son of Hari Svāmī as its writer.³ Later on he mentions it as Tāṁḍya Brāhmaṇa-bhāṣhya of Java Svāmī, son of Hāri Svāmī.⁴ Jaya Svāmī as a commentator on the dharma-sūtras is mentioned in Kṛitya-kalpa-taru.

A commentary by Sāyaṇa on the Tāṁdya Mahā Brāhmaṇa has already been published from Calcutta. In this bhāṣhya, Sāyaṇa has taken help from the bhāṣhya of Dhanvin on Drāhyāyaṇa-śrauta-srūtra.

3. Nārāyaṇāchārya

A commentary by Nārāyaṇāchārya is available in Mysore¹ but appears to be by Sāyaṇa and not by Nārāyaṇāchārya.

I. Shaḍviṁśa Brāhmaṇa

Sāyaṇa (Vikrama saṁvat 1372-1444)

A commentary by Sāyaṇa, called Vijñāpana-bhāṣhya, on Shaḍviṁśa Brāhmaṇa has already been published.

J. Mantra Brāhmaṇa

1. Bhaṭṭa Guṇavishṇu (prior to 1150 A. D.)

Two commentaries on the Mantra Brāhmaṇa, by Guṇavishṇu, son of Dāmuka and by Sāyaṇa. Sāyaṇa has taken help from Guṇavishṇu, whose period is prior to fourteenth century.

Śatrughna in the introduction of Mantrārtha-dīpikā writes : Uvaṭe mantra-vyākhyā Guṇa-vishṇau brāhmaṇīyasarvasve,² i. e., the explanations of the hymns in the bhāṣhya by Uvaṭa and of Brāhmaṇas in Guṇavishṇu. The date of Śatrughna is certain ; he writes in his introduction : ādeśādatha rājñastasya Śrī-Dharmachandrasya,³ i. e., on the explicit command of king Śrī Dharmachandra. He mentions his predecessors Prayāgachandra and Śrī Rāma Chandra, who all were the rulers of Trigartta = Kangra. The period of Prayāga Chandra is 1495, that of Rāma Chandra 1510 and of Dharma Chandra 1520. It is, therefore, possible to state that the period of Guṇavishṇu is prior to the sixteenth century, according to this evidence.

Halāyudha in his Brāhmaṇa-sarvasva refers to Guṇavishṇu. The date of Halāyudha is 1175-1200 A. D. Guṇavishṇu had belonged to Mithilā or Bengal as his work is in use in that region.

According to Stonner, Guṇavishṇu had preceded Sāyaṇa. Durga Mohan Bhattacharya has the same opinion. He has compared portions of Sāyaṇa's commentary of Mantra Brāhmaṇa with Guṇavishṇu's commentary. It is certain that one has borrowed from the other. Halāyudha also borrowed from Guṇavishṇu. Having preceded Sāyaṇa, Guṇavishṇu does not borrow from him. He had belonged to the court of king Vallālasena and Lakshmaṇasena. He may be assigned a date towards the end of twelfth century or the beginning of thirteenth century.

Chhāndogya-mantra-bhāshya is a commentary on the hymns of the Kaṭhuma recension of the Sāmaveda.¹ Most of the hymns in it are also in the Mantra Brāhmaṇa. At the end of the sixth khaṇḍa, Guṇavishṇu comments on the beginning hymn of each Veda. Writing on the first hymn of the Rigveda, he states that its apportionment is in Vedic offering as : Viniyoge brahma-yajñe.² He also refers to the first hymn of Śukla Yajurveda. He writes about the first hymn of the Sāmaveda as :

Śanno devirabhishtāye śanno bhavantu pitaye. Śaṁyorabhisravantu nah,³ and states : atharvedādīmantro ayam Pippalāda drishṭa. Varuṇa-daivata. Chhando-Gāyatrī. Atra cha śanno bhavantu ityatra āpo bhavantu iti paṭhyate.⁴

i. e., this is the first hymn of Atharva-veda, its seer is Pippalāda which means that this hymn was the first hymn of the Paippalāda-saṁhitā.

Guṇavishṇu had his commentaries on Mantra Brāhmaṇa and Pāraskara-grihya-sūtra. In his introduction to Chhāndogya-mantra-bhāshya, Parameśvara Jha writes :

Etatkrītam Pāraskara-grihya-bhāshyamapyasti tachcha Chandanapura-grāma-vāsino mṛita-vaidika-Jayapāla-śarmaṇah savidhe antimabhāge katipaya patravikalam mayāvalokitamāsita.⁵

His commentary is very simple. Another manuscript dated saṁvat 1577 of the commentary by Guṇavishṇu was available in the D. A. V. College, Lahore.

2. Kāśyapa Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra

Kāśyapa Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra had written his commentary called Sāmavedārsheya-dīpa. A manuscript of this bhāshya is available in Mysore. He is different from Kauśika Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara. Burnell had written that his commentaries related to the brāhmaṇas of the Sāmaveda. I have not seen them. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara has, however, referred to Bharata Svāmī, who was alive towards the end of the thirteenth century, and was a contemporary of Sāyaṇa.¹

M. Sāma-vidhāna Brāhmaṇa

Bharata Svāmī

Bharata Svāmī was the famous commentator on the Sāmaveda and other related works. His father was Nārāyaṇa and the name of his mother was Yajñadā. He writes in his introduction to the commentary on the Sāmaveda :

Hosalādhiśvare prīthvīm Rāmanāthe praśāsati, vyākhyā kriyate ayam kshemeṇa Śrīrange vasatā mayā.²

i. e., I had prepared this commentary residing at Śrīrangapaṭanam during the reign of Rāmantha, king of Hoysala. At the end of the same commentary, he writes :

i. e., Bharata Svāmī of Kāśyapa gotra and son of Nārāyaṇa and Yajñadā, had explained all the richās of the Sāmaveda. A manuscript is preserved in Alvar, its colophon is :

On last page it was written Bhavatrāta-bhāshya on brāhmaṇa available at... ..Bhavatrāta has referred to Śabara Svāmī and Bhavadāsa on p. 153 of Jaiminiya Śrauta-bhāshya.

Another person Devatrāta had written his commentary on Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra. His other name is mentioned as Varāhadeva.¹ In another manuscript, it is written : varāhakāya devatrāta. A Varāhadeva Svāmī is also mentioned.² Devatrāta also appears to be an earlier commentator. A portion of his commentary on Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra has been published in Agnihotra-chandrikā.³

The brāhmaṇas were compiled during the Mahābhārata period. The available commentaries mostly belong to the mediaeval periods. The gap is of almost three thousand years. The works of earlier commentators are not forthcoming. The style of commentary is almost similar. The earlier commentators give only the literal translation. Sāyaṇa and other later commentators offer detailed explanations, as well. The metaphysical aspect of the brāhmaṇas is seldom explained by these commentators. They do not throw desired light on these subjects. These commentaries as above explained need to be studied with all possible care as the individual imaginations of the commentators have to be sifted. In the absence of any other material their critical study is sure to help in the grasp of the meaning of the brāhmaṇas and the Vedas.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

THEIR SUBJECT MATTER

The brāhmaṇas are an explanation of the Vedas. These elaborate the ādhidaivika contents i. e., the subjects related to the nature and devas (दिव्य गुण युक्त) who are the physical forces or powers. These brāhmaṇas also explain the influence of the atmosphere and the plants. The special themes related to the self or the soul and the supreme spirit are, as well, dialated upon in these works. The key to the understanding of the cosmos lies embedded in these brāhmaṇas. They disclose wonderful knowledge about the secrets of the physical world. What modern science has attempted to unravel in recent years, has already been well expressed in these works. Their grasp of the details of the creation of the universe is complete and comprehensive. Its presentation is simple and fascinating. It has to be sifted, if the laudations to the divine beings are merely to God or these refer to the various physical forces working under the eternal laws of the One Great Being. These also unfold the ādibhautika contents or the primary elements mentioned in the Vedas.

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has a direct reference to science in etadu vijñānam.¹ Scientific references from the brāhmaṇas are quoted in the Nirukta and the Kalpa-sūtras as iti vijñāyate. The exponents of the brāhmaṇas had vast and comprehensive knowledge of Deva-vidyā which expressed in their works helps to understand the form of the universe prior to its creation as well as the stages in its formation. The form of the universe prior to its creation is best described in the Rigveda as :

Nāsadāsinno sadāsittadānīm nāsidrajo no vyomā paro yat, kimāvarivah kuha kasya śarmannambhah kimāsīd gahanam gabhīram.
Na mṛityurāsīdamṛitam na tarhi na rātryā ahna āsīt praketaḥ, Ānidavātam svadhayā tadekam tasmādhānyanna parah kim chanāsa.¹

i.e., in that stage nothing had taken form, The creation had its emanation from purusha to be equated with hiranya-garbha or prajāpati. The Kaṭha-upanishad has described this purusha as :

Mahataḥ paramavyaktamvyaktāt puruṣaḥ parah, puruṣhāt na param kinchit sā kāśhṭhā sā parā gatih.²

i.e., nothing is beyond that purusha, who had the desire and his manifestation or creation started according to Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as :

So ayam puruṣaḥ prajāpatirakāmayat... Brahmaiva prathamama aṣṛijata trayīmeva vidyām.³

The āpah molecules were pervading the universe; they gave birth to a form of agni called apām napāt in the Veda. Āpah are considered mostly as feminine and agni as masculine in the Vedic literature. Āpah and agni had given birth to a golden egg, which got converted into the form of purusha, which is prajāpati :

Āpo ha vā idamagre sailamevāsa. Tā akāmayanta. Katham nu prajāyamaḥi iti. Tā aśrāmyan. Tāstapo atapyanta. Tāsu tapastapyamānāsu hiraṇyamaṇḍam sambabhūva. Ajāto ha tarhi saṁvatsaram āsa tadidam hiraṇyamāṇḍam i.e., this was the final form. Prajāpati then made a golden form of himself. Hence they say Parjāpati is golden.

Rūpāmeva tat. Prajāpatirhiranyamāntāta ātmano akuruta. Tasmādāhu-rhiraṇmayah prajāpatiriti.

Parjāpati was amidst the āpah ocean which were pervading like air; but the sound waves travelled in them. It is explicit from the following :

(a) Prajāpatirva idameka āsit; Tasya vāgeva svamāsīt. Vāg dvitīyā Sa aikshatemāmeva vācham viśrijā. Iyam vā idam sarvam vibhavatnyeshyati. Iti. Sa vācham vyasrijata. Sedam sarvam vibhavanyait. Sordhvodātanot. Yathā apām dhārā santat evam.²

(b) Sa bhūrīti vyāharata. Sa bhūmimasrijata.³

(c) Prajāpatiryaadagre vyāharat sa bhurītyeva vyāharat. Sa imām asrijata.⁴

(d) Sa āsvapsu bhurbhuvah svarīti vyāharat.⁵

i.e., bhūh, bhuvah, svah, the three words appeared simultaneously with the birth of the three worlds. Bhūh with the separation of the earth; bhuvah with the formation of the middle region and svah with the separation of the heavenly region. The Prajāpati thus manifested himself in his own form as the Universe created by him.

The Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa further states about prajāpati :

Prajāpatirvā idamekā āsit. Nāharāsīnna rātrirāsīt. So asminnandhe tamasi prāsarpāt.¹

i.e., it was prajāpati alone; neither the day nor the night were in existence. He was moving ahead in the blinding darkness. He is considered as the thirty fourth god or the physical force : trayastrinśadvai devatāh. Prajāpatiśchatustrinśah,² i.e., these are thirty three gods and Prajāpati is the thirty fourth. Again it is similarly stated : prajāpatiśchatustrinśo devatānām,³ i.e., prajāpati is the thirty fourth devatā, or god. It is repeatedly stated in the brāhmaṇas that prajāpati had desired and this universe was created :

(a) Prajāpatirvā aidamagra āsit. Eka eva so akāmayat.⁴

(b) Prajāpatirha vā idamagra aeka evāsa. Sa aikshata.⁵

The movement of prajāpati in the blinding darkness is narrated in the Bible, as well, ... 'and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.'⁶ The water here is a synonym of the āpah of the brāhmaṇas.

Prajāpati has been further described in the brāhmaṇas :

(a) Ashṭau vasavah. Ekādaśa rudrā dvādaśādityā ime aeva dyāvāprithivi trayastrinśyau trayastrinśadvai devāh prajāpatiśchatustrinśastadenam prajāpatim karotyetaadvā astyetaadhyamṛitam tad hyastyetadu tadyanmartyam sa esha prajāpati sarvam vai Prajāpatistadenam prajāpatim karoti.⁷

ĀPAH

Āpah is a real element. It exists in two forms. From the original form of the āpah paramāṇus, arise the molecular combinations of helium, hydrogen, oxygen and water etc. Its second form is ordinary liquid water. The original distinct form was noticed by the seers and described as : yathā hyāpastu vichchinnā svarūpamupayānti vai,⁴ i. e., the āpah when broken or split up or disintegrated attain their own form. A comprehension of the āpah is explicit from :

(a) Āpo vā idam sarvamāpnavana.⁵

(b) Yadāpnot tasmādāpah. Yadvṛiṇota tasmādvā.⁶

i. e., the āpah pervaded this completely. The name āpah represents this truth, as they had covered all.

Āpah had various forms, e. g., vidhā,⁷ divyā āpah,⁸ vastīvarī, and ekadhanah,⁹ Vidhā has been explained as the creator of all in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. Āpah had three forms as : traya āpah.¹⁰ Another reference, āpah chatusṭayyah,¹ in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa is explained as chatvāro avayavā yāsām tāh chatusṭayyah.² It means that the āpah had four components. A synonym of āpah or its meaning in other languages is not easy to form. These are accepted as feminine in the brāhmaṇas as : yoshāh vā āpah.³ They are described in the feminine gender and plural number always. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa mentions that the āpah were devoid of movement :

Yatra vai yañasya śiro achhidyata. Tasya raso dratvāpah praviveśa. Tenaivaitad rasena āpah syandante.⁴

i. e., a liquid entered the āpah and they had the movement. It means prior to this stage the āpah had no movement. The same fact is evident from Śānti-parva of the Mahābhārata :

Tasmāchchottishṭhate devāt sarvabhūtahitādrasah, āpo hi tena yujyante dravatvam prāpnvanti cha.⁵

i. e., the liquid or rasa comes out of him, from the deva, from the elements. Mixed with that the āpah gain movement. Attaining the liquid from these, āpah became the chief element and all pervading. Their liquid form is also mentioned in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa :

Tad abhramiva samahanyatah. Tad vastim abhinat. Sa samudro abhavat
.....Tadvā idamāpah salilamāsit.⁶

Cosmology begins with these āpah. These could be considered as nebula or a gaseous form causing the formation of electrons.

FORMATION of EARTH

This earth was the first to be born of the elements. It was the first to be born of the different lokas or regions. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has the references :

- (a) Iyam vai pṛithivī bhūtasya prathamajā.¹
- (b) Iyamu (bhūmih) vā eshām lokānām prathamā asṛijyata.²

The earth was formed on the pronouncement of bhū by the Prajāpati. He had pronounced it first and the earth was formed as :

- (a) Sa bhūriti vyāharata. Sa bhumimasṛijat.³
- (b) Prajāpatiryaadagre vyāharat sa bhurityeva vyāharat. Sa imām asṛijat.⁴

AGNI

What is agni ? The modern physicist equates agni with energy. It is one of the real elements, like pṛithivī and āpah. It is of two kinds; one of the real element state and the other of the ordinary state. Its Latin equivalent is ignis. The agni exists in nature in forty-nine different forms. It is stated in the Vishṇu Purāṇa : evamekonapañchāśad vahnayah parikīrtitah.⁵ The causes of these various kinds of agni are the different arrangements of molecules of agni. It is named teja or brilliance and jyoti or light. It is born three-fold⁶ according to the following :

Divaspari prathamam jajñe agnirasmad dvitīyam pari jātavedāh, tritīyamapsu nṛimaṇā ajasramindhāna enam jarate svādhih.⁷

This is the Vaisapri richā of the Rigveda and is also available in the Yajurveda.¹ Divah has been specially explained by Mādhyandina, disciple of Yājñavalkya, in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

Divaspari prathamam jāñe aagnih iti. Prāṇo vai divah. Prāṇādu vā esha prathamamajāyata. Asmad dvitīyam pari jātavedā iti. Yadenamado dvitīyam purushavidho ajanayat. Tritīyam apsviti. Yadenamadas tṛitīyam adbhyo ajanayat.²

This is the third real element. Its first birth is from prāṇa or breath or vāyu. Its second birth was on the formation of the Golden Egg, i. e., the hiranya-garbha. This is jātaveda agni occupying the middle regions. Its third birth was in the āpah. The āpah are the cause of agni as : āpo vā agneryonih.³ The three types of agni had occupied three regions, the earth, the antariksha or the middle region and divi i. e., the heavenly region :

Sa etāh tisrah tanūreshu lokeshu vinyadhata. Yadasya pavamānam rūpamāsīt tadasyām prithivyām nyadhata. Atha yat pāvakam tadantarikshe. Atha yat śuchi, tad divi. Tadvā ṛishayah pratibubudhire.⁴

These three forms of agni are called pavamāna, pāvaka and śuchi. Apparently these are the adjectives, but these, on the other hand are the proper names of agni. These three names explain the creation.⁵ The three combined, these are known as trivṛid agni, which has been best explained in the Purāṇas.⁶ These three forms of agni had a similar expression in the Rigveda:

(a) Agnih ṛishih pavamānah pāñchajanyah.⁷

- (b) Agne pāvaka rochishā,¹
 (c) Agnih śuchi-vrata-tamah.²

The śuchi form of agni pervading the heavenly regions has been further detailed in the brāhmaṇas :

- (a) Yat (agneh) śuchi (rūpam)³ taddivi (nyadhatta).⁴
 (b) Viryam vai śuchi. Yadvā asya (agneh) etadujjvalati etadasya viryam vai śuchi.⁵
 (c) Asau vā ādityo agnih śuchih.⁶

These three types of agni are also known as bhūpati, bhuvana-pati, and bhutānām-pati. It has five names according to the Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā : tapah, śochih, archih, harah, and tejah. Yāska in his Nirukta states that jyoti is also known as hara : jyotih harah uchyate.⁷ Archi means a flame. Archih agni has been explained in the Ājiminīya Brāhmaṇa as :

Atha ha vā agnirvaiśvānara itthamevāsa yatheme angārāh. So akāmayata śnushṭayo me jāyeranna archaya iti.....Ete ha vā asya śnushṭayo yadarchayah.⁸

It is interesting to note that agni had no brilliance in its initial stages. The Prajāpati through sāma-vibrations or waves had put brilliance into it. It is stated :

(a) Agnirvai jāto na vyarochata. So akāmayata. Tejasvi syāmiti. So agnaye tejasvine ajam kṛṣṇagrīvam ālabhata. Tato vai sa tejasvi abhavat.⁹

i.e., when agni was born it had no brilliance. It desired to have brilliance. He touched Aja and had brilliance. Varcha means brilliance. Kṛishṇa Grīva Aja, mentioned in the Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā and the Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā, which caused brilliance is not possible to explain at this stage.

It is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa that the white form is due to agni : yat śuklam tadāgneyam yat kṛishṇam tat saumyam.³ Similarly, it is stated in the Vāyu-purāṇa : śuklachchhāyo agnirāpaścha kṛishṇachchhāyā cha medinī.⁴ Here, agni and āpah are of white reflection.

The ten properties of agni according to Śānti-parva of the Mahābhārata are durdharshatā, jyoti, tāpa, pāka, prakāśa, śauchā, rāga, laghu, taikshṇya and ūrdhva-gamana :

HIRAṆYAGARBHA—MAHAD AṆḌA

The āpah were in their prime from. Brahma caused their desire to expand. Their efforts caused the creation of a golden egg. This egg continued to float for full one year. (This duration is of the daiva year and cannot be compared to the ordinary year). From it was born the Purusha=Prajāpati=Brahma. This aṇḍa had three forms of movements : paryaplavana, prasarpaṇa and sameshaṇa. The first movement was the result of the āpah. The other two movements are inherited by the plants and prithivī etc. which are the offsprings of the golden-aṇḍa. The emergence of hiranya-garbha is scientifically narrated in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa : atha ha tatah purāhorātre samślishte evāsaturavyākrite.¹ This aṇḍa on account of agni had a radiant form. Brahma gave it its expanded form. This aṇḍa was the effect of the elements. Its upper portion was light and its lower portion was heavy and it helped in the formation of earth. It was not round but was more in length. The measurements of Prajāpati are mentioned in the Tāndya Brāhmaṇa : yāvān vai prajāpatih ūrdhvah tāvān tiryāṇ,² i. e., the height of Prajāpati equals his sides. The internal form of this aṇḍa is described in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as :

Sā vai śāṇī bhavati. Mṛidvayasaditi nveva śāṇī. Yatra vai prajāpatirajāyata garbho bhūtvā etasmād yajñāt tasya yannedishṭhamulbamāsīt te³ śāṇāḥ. Tasmātte pūtayo vānti. Yadvasya jarayvāsīt taddīkshitavasānam. Antaram vā ulbam jarāyuno bhavati.⁴

PRITHIVĪ — NINE stages of FORMATION

The formation of earth had to undergo another nine stages to take its present manifest form. It still had the predominance of āpah. It had not attained its hardened form, as yet. It was swayed by strong winds. The twin sons of Prajāpati, the devas and the asuras, both had a desire to take hold of it. As soon as it neared the devas, they encircled it with pebbles resulting in its hardened form. The North Pole is considered to be the direction of the devas and the earth at present is stable towards that very direction. The South Pole is considered to be the direction of the asuras, and this direction has more of water instead of the earth. This formation has been mentioned in details in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

Atha śarkarāḥ sambharati. Devāscha vā asurāśchobhaye prajāpatyāḥ paspridhire. Sā heyam prithivī alelāyad yathā pushkaraparnamevam Tām ha sma vātah samvahati.¹ Sopaiva devān jagāma. Upāsurān.....Tad yathā śamkubih charma vihanyāt. Evamimām pratishthām śarkarābhih paryabṛimhanta.²

The nine formative stages of the earth are also mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as :

Sa śrāntastepānah fenamasṛijata.....Sa śrāntastepāno mṛidam śushkāpamūsha sikatam śarkarām aśmānam ayo hiranyam-oshadhi-vanaspati-asṛijata. Tenemām prithivīm prāchchhādayata. Tā vā etā nava sṛishṭayah.³

i. e., Prajāpati, practising penance caused the formation of fena, mṛit, śushkāpa, ūsha, sikatā, śarkarā, aśmā, ayah, and oshadhi-vanaspati. He covered the earth with them. These are the nine different stages in the formation of this earth.

In its various stages of formation, the earth has been given different names according to its properties. Bhūmi or the earth is its original name when Prajāpati or Purusha created it with the pronouncement of Bhūh. This bhūh word had another name, the Upodaka or watery, the moist or wet world. It is better stated as the world in the vicinity of water. This name is repeated in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa, III, 347. It implies that water, a special privilege of this planet, may not be the privilege of other planets. Prithivī is the culmination form of the earth and has more than twenty names.

1. FENA or FOAM

Foam was the first stage in the formation of the earth. The comingling of āpah and agni produced foam or fena. The hot āpah had produced them. It is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : tā atapyanta. Tāh fenamasṛijanta¹ and tasmād apām taptānām feno jāyate.² In this stage the bhūmi was neither dry nor wet as : na vā esha śushko nārdro vyushṭāsīt.³ This foam is mentioned in a hymn of the Rigveda : apām fenena-namuche śīrah,⁴ i.e., with the foam of the āpah the head of Namuchi was severed.

This foam is also called as apām arkah. It is described in detail in the Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa : āpo vā arkah. Tad yad apām śara āsīt tat samahanyat sā prithivī abhavat,⁵ i. e., the āpah were membrum virile and their curd-formed-foam was solid; this became the earth. The solid stage of foam is narrated in Śānti-parva of Mahābhārata :

Ākāśādabhavat vāri salilādagnimārutau, agnimārutasaṁyogātatah sambhavanmahi.⁶

i. e., vāri or water was born of ākāśa or the sky, agni and māruta were born of vāri or water. The prithivī was born of agni and maruta, i.e., rays of energy. Agni helped by energy causes water in the sky. Conjoined with agni and maruta, the water becomes solid. The oily quality of that water takes the form of earth.

This foam was the first stage in the formation of the earth; the other related phase was that of the āpah. It is mentioned in the Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa : yadev tat feno dvitīyam rūpam asṛijyat.¹

2. MRIT or CLAY

With the settling of foam, the new form of the earth was of clay. It is mentioned : sa (fenah) yadopahanyate mṛideva bhavati,² i. e., the hardened foam becomes clay. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa states that the two main forms of this earth are that of āpah and foam : atho dvyam hyeva etad rūpam mṛichcha āpaścha.³ A portion of the upper crest of the aṇḍa or the nebula had become clay as described in the same brāhmaṇa : atha yattat kapālamāsīd eshā sā mṛit⁴. This clay form is the earth : yanmṛid iyam tat (pṛithivī).⁵

The planet earth when it separated from the nebula or the aṇḍa was only āpah or a special type of liquid. The particles for the formation of the earth were merged in the āpah. In course of time foam started forming in that liquid. This foam subsequently caused the formation of clay. It means that clay is not basic content of this earth. It forms part of a later stage.

The earth in clay form was very small. Its expansion had not taken place. The fact is clearly mentioned in the vedic literature :

(a) Atha vai tarhi alpā pṛithivyāsīd, ajātā oshadhayah.⁶

(b) Yāvad vai varāhasya chashālam tāvatīyamagra āsīt.⁷

i. e., that earth was small and had no plants on it; in size it was like the snout of a boar; or like the northern altar made for a sacrifice; the expansion of the earth to its present shape had not taken place.

3. ŚUSHKĀPA

The third stage is termed as śushkāpa, which means that the āpah had dried. It means that the sun had taken its shape and the wet āpah had started drying up.

4. ŪSHA or SALINE EARTH

Another stage in the formation of the earth was when its soil was impregnated with saline particles. This was sterile soil. This had been formed out of the portion of the heavenly regions left over on the earth. In the brāhmaṇas ūsha also means a cattle. It is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : paśava ūshāh.² The same brāhmaṇa has another evidence :

Asau ha vai dyaurasyai prithivyā etān paśūn pradadau. Tasmān paśavya-mūsharamāhuh.....ta amuta āgatā asyām prithivyām pratishṭhitāh. Tamanayor-dyāvāprithivyo rasam manyante.³

i. e., the heavenly regions gave for this prithivī these highly charged particles (and not cattle). The highly charged energy particles are useful in saline earth. These energy particles are emitted from the heavenly regions. It has to be stated that the cattle or animals on this earth never like saline earth, instead they only prefer green fields. These energy particles emitted from the heavenly and middle regions are specially discernible during the night. It is clearly explained :

The paśu in all these references from the vedic literature have been clearly differentiated from the cattle. These have on the other hand been described as possessed of agni or energy. Prajāpati had given birth to all of them from the mouth. As these are energy particles, these are discernible. These are formed of energy from the sun and the elements. These have a direct relation with the winds of the middle regions which forward it to the earth. These are equated with marut. The heavenly regions abound in highly charged energy particles.

The rudras or the disintegrating and reintegrating energy particles causing violent tempests and producing howling and roaring sounds in the regions have direct relation with energy or lightning. These paśus imbibe the energy from the rūdras. For this reason Rudra is widely known as Paśupati; its real significance has been lost and the popular meaning as Śiva, the Paśupati is more common these days. The conveyor of Rudra is *Ākhu*¹ or a mouse who is none else but another highly charged energy particle.

The earth having saline particles did not have only paramāṇus from the elements but also had highly charged energy particles from the heavenly and middle regions. In the Suśruta Saṁhitā salt is termed as āgneya or having energy.² It appears that the salty water of the sea also had relation to the energy particles. The scientific term for ūsha is Sodium Nitrate or Potassium Nitrate. It has to be expressed that the earth has plenty of energy emitted to it through these energy particles during its formative stage.

5. SIKATĀ

The next stage in the formation of earth is called Sikatā or granular form. It is described as :

- (a) Sa (mṛit) atapyat sā sikatā asṛijyata.³
- (b) Esha vā agnirvaiśvānaro yadasā ādītyah. Sa yad iha āsit tasyaitad bhasma yat sikatā.⁴

THE BRĀHMAṆAS

(d) Bhrājanta iva hi sikatā. Agnervā etad vaiśvānarasya bhasma yat sikatā.¹

(e) Agneretad vaiśvānarasya reto yat sikatā.²

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa calls sikatā as : sikatā vā apām purīṣam,³ i. e., sikatā is the rubble or crumbling or loose earth. It is mentioned as of two types, white and black, as : dve hi sikate śuklā cha kṛishṇā cha.⁴ These white particles have more of energy and the blacks have the āpah.

It is called silica, having silicon and oxygen, i. e., SiO_2 . Silicon is available only with oxygen (or Vaiśvānara agni?). 'It is recorded in the Encyclopedia Brittanica, 'It (silica) has also been found as a constituent of various parts of planets and has been recognised in stars.'⁵ Sikatā is formed of the current of Vaiśvānara agni or the energy of the rays of the sun or sunlight. A granular heap is formed by the solar energy. These had, therefore, shining particles. The solar rays caused intense heat on the saline earth and the next formation of the earth was granular. It is also mentioned that the sun at that stage was very close to this earth.

6. ŚARKARĀ

The next stage was of gravel or small stones called śarkarā. It has been described as :

(a) Sikatābhyah śarkarām.⁶

The earth was as yet marshy; it had not assumed a hardened core. With the formation of gravel in its interior regions, it assumed a hard inner crust, as well. This gravel or small stones were formed from the sikatā or the crumbling or loose earth. This fact has been expressed in literature as :

- (a) Sīthirā vā iyamagra āsīt. Tām prajāpatiḥ śarkarābhiradrimhat.³
- (b) Ārdreva hīyamāsīt. Tām devāḥ śarkarābhiradrimhat.⁴
- (c) Ārdreva hīyamāsīt. Tām devāḥ śarkarābhiradrimhan.⁵
- (d) Ēvamimām pratishṭhām śarkarābhiḥ paryabrimhanta.⁶

Isn't it the same process as for the construction of buildings wherein the foundations are strengthened by the use of pebbles and brick walls raised over them.

7. AŚMĀ

Stone formation was the resultant formation of gravel. The gravel had ultimately turned into stones, and the mountains were also formed. The references to these details are :

- (a) Śarkarāyā aśmānam (asṛijata). Tasmāt śarkarāśmaiva antato bhavati.⁷

8. AYAH and HIRANYAMA

Appearance of iron had followed the formation of stones. According to Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā, ayah and loha are considered to be two separate metals. Ayah is the first metal and gold or suvarṇa the latest metal. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata : aśmano lohamutthitam.¹

9. VEGETATION on EARTH

In the absence of plants and trees, the earth as yet was bald. There was no growth on it, it was devoid of vegetation like the hardened back of a tortoise. This shape of the earth is described as :

- (a) Kālvālī kṛitā heyam tarhi prithivyāsa.²
- (b) Atha vai tarhi alpā prithivyāsīda ajātā oshadhayah.³
- (c) Rikshā ha vā iyamagra āsīt. Tasyām devā rohiṇyām vīrudho arohayān.⁴

- (f) Oshadhi-vanaspatayo vai lomāni.⁷
- (g) Ta ime lokā abhavan rikshā anupajīvanīyāh. Kathamime lokā loma grihṇīyuh.⁸

In the growth of trees, plants, creepers and other vegetation, soma had a major share. Soma is considered to be the master of the vegetation as : soma oshadhīnām adhipatiḥ.⁹ The part played by soma in the growth of vegetation is narrated in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa :

Somam vāi rājānam yat suparṇa āharat samabhinat tasya vā viprusho apatamstā evemā oshadhayo abhavan. Sarvā u ha vai saumyā oshadhayah.¹

The seeds had been born, soma and prithivi had united. The roots of vegetation predominate with soma contents where as the upper portion has more of energy and dries up soon. This idea expressed in the Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa is also mentioned in the Maitrāyaṇi-saṁhitā as :

Prāchinam vai somīroshadhayah. Pratīchinam raudrīh. Na hi prāchinam śushyanti. Śushyanti pratīchinam.²

ELECTRONS in PRITHIVI

This earth is often mentioned in the brāhmaṇas as possessed of electrons. The other planets are not supposed to be so possessed of electrons. It has been stated :

(a) Āgneyī prithivī.³

(b) Āgneyo ayam lokah.⁴

The upper crust of the earth does not have these energy particles. Its innermost centre is full of such particles. The three strings of the formation are the energy, the prithivi and the vegetation. Agni is a real element and in the womb of this earth, it is in predominance as mentioned in various works :

(a) Agnigarbhā prithivī.⁵

(b) Mātā putram yathopasthe sāgnim bibhartu garbha ā iti.⁶

(c) Yathā mātā putramupasthe bibhṛiyādevamagnim garbhe bibhartviti.⁷

A similar idea has been expressed by Gamow :

“It is not however, difficult to see that there must have been a time when no such solid crust existed at all, and when our Earth was a glowing globe of melted rocks. In fact, the study of the Earth’s interior indicates that most of its body is still in a molten state, and that the ‘solid ground’ of which we speak so casually is actually only a comparatively thin sheet floating on the surface of the molten magma. The simplest way to arrive at this conclusion is to remember that the temperature measured at different depths under the surface of the Earth increases at the rate of about 300° C per kilometer of depth (or 160° per thousand feet) so that, for example, in the world’s deepest mine (a gold mine in Robinson Deep, South Africa) the walls are so hot that an air conditioning plant had to be installed to prevent the miners from being roasted alive.

“At such a rate of increase, the temperature of the Earth must reach the melting point of rocks (between 12000° C and 18000° C) at a depth of only 50 km beneath the surface, that is, at less than 1 per cent of the total distance from the centre. All the material farther below, forming more than 97 per cent of the Earth’s body, must be in a completely molten state.”³

“The temperature of the rocks steadily increases as we dig deeper and deeper beneath the surface.”⁴

“During the last two billion years the temperature of most of the Earth remained practically unchanged and that the cooling effect has been confined to the outer parts of its body.”⁵

The meaning of oshadhi itself is very interesting as : *osham dhaya iti*⁶, i. e., to possess the energy. The vegetation continues to possess the energised particles from the earth, which means that most of these particles get consumed :

- (c) Tasmādagmirmadhyata oshadhīh pravishṭah.³

Was this earth full of energised particles from the beginning of its formation ? Had it been so, the various stages as above described would have been turned into dry or ashen forms. The process of its getting energised and the growth of vegetation has been helpful to each other. Some of the trees possess a larger proportion of these particles like the śamī tree or the mimiosa suma which is a very hard wood and is supposed to contain fire. The Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa states the same fact : prajāpatih agnimasṛijata. Sā abibheta. Pra mā dhakshyatiti. Tam śamyā aśamayāt,⁴ i. e., Prajāpati had caused the birth of agni. He was afraid to be burnt by it. The śamī tree cooled it. Similar is the quality of the aśvattha tree, or ficus religiosa, narrated as : agnirdevebhyo nilāyata. Aśvo rūpam kṛtvā. So aśvatthe saṁvat-saramatishṭhat. Tadaśvatthasyāśvatthatvam.⁵

Aśvattha and śamī trees are considered the best for the sacrificial fire. Similar are the qualities of veṇu or bamboo and muñja or sacchārum sara trees detailed as :

- (a) Agnirdevebhyā udakrāmat. Sa veṇum prāviśat. Sa sushirah.⁶

These energy particles had entered the earth through their currents. This fact is mentioned in the Kapishthala-kāṭha-saṁhitā as : Ye agnayah purīṣiṇa āviśtā prithivīmanu.² In the same Samhitā it is mentioned : māteva putram prithivīm purīshyamagnim sve yonāvubh-ārukḥā.³ Sāyaṇa has commented on purīshya as : purīshyāh = śikatā sammiśrāh.⁴ According to the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa, agni is deposited in the earth : agnirasi prithivyām śritah.⁵ The entry of the currents of the energy into this earth has been well described in the same brāhmaṇa : agnirdevebhyo nilayata. Ākhūrūpam kṛtvā. Sa prithivīm prāviśat,⁶ i. e., agni concealed itself from the physical forces and taking the shape of currents entered this earth. Ākhu, herein mentioned, is the coneyor of rudra, which has been explained above.⁷ Rudra is a from of agni of the middle regions. These ākhu are special particles whose length is like that of a forest mouse, who dug into the earth and enter it; similarly these energy particles also enter the earth. Why their entrance was concealed from the devas or the physical forces remains to be explained ?

The agni inside the earth is in a burning shape. If it is burning, what is the fuel for it ? Is there oxygen in that portion of the earth ? When āpah could not continue to exist there, what is the form of the agni in that place ? Why the temperature is so hot in that region. All these have been described in the vedic literature and their understanding unfolds a better study of all these problems than the incomplete researches of the present day.

SIZE of PRITHIVĪ

The earth had passed through different development stages. It had taken its shape. It came to be described in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa as :

Sa esha prajāpatih agniṣṭomah parimaṇḍalo bhūtvā ananto bhūtvā śaye. Tadanukṛitīdam api anyā devatāh parimaṇḍalāh. Parimaṇḍala ādityah, parimaṇḍalah chandramāh parimaṇḍalā dyauh, parimaṇḍalamantariksham, parimaṇḍalā iyam prithivī.¹

SARPA-RĀJÑĪ PRITHIVĪ

An interesting name of the earth mentioned in the vedic literature is sarpa-rājñī. This adjective has been used due to its crawling or creeping movement. Its crawling movement has been explained in the brāhmaṇas as :

(a) Iyam (prithivī) vai sarpa-rājñī. Iyam hi sarpato rājñī.²

(b) Devā vai sarpāh. Teshāmiyam (prithivī) rājñī.³

i. e., this earth is the queen of the crawling planets. This earth crawls like the other planets. The crawling physical forces or the devas like Indra, Mitra, Bṛihaspati, Sūrya etc. have a supreme force or a queen called as prithivī. Indra, Mitra and other devas are considered as vital forces or prāṇa or gases.⁴ Bṛihaspati and other are planets or lokas. These all crawl along with other forces as :

(c) Ime vai lokāh sarpā. Te hānena sarveṇa sarpanti yadidam kim cha.⁵

(d) Ime vai lokāh sarpā yaddhi kim cha sarpatyeshveva tallokeshu sarpanti.⁶

i. e., all these planets are crawling. These all crawl along with the vital forces on this earth and the highly energised particles etc. in the middle regions. The earth crawls along with its satellite planets and similarly the middle and the heavenly regions crawl with their attached forces.

These crawling physical forces have been specially described as :

- (e) Namo astu sarpebhyo ye ke cha prithivīmanu. Ye antarikshe ye divi tebhyaḥ sarpebhyo namah.¹

These crawling physical forces and planets are held in great reverence. The planet earth along with the sun is considered to be a supreme force and is called as queen. As mentioned earlier a sarpa-rājñī sūkta is mentioned in Rigveda 10.189.²

This earth is the abode of all the physical forces. The sun is the soul or the controller of all of them as :³

Prithivī vai sarveshām devānām āyatanam.
Antariksham vai sarveshām devānām āyatanam.
Dyaurvai sarveshām devānām āyatanam.
Suryo vai sarveshām devānām ātmā.

i. e., the earth, the middle regions and the heavenly regions are all the abode of the devas or the physical forces. These have a direct relation with the sun which is described as their soul or controller.

This earth is also described as having bisa or movement or like a stalk, a part of which is underground. A stalk is hollow with holes. The earth has the same form. Below the upper crust of the earth, the clay and sand have holes in them. It is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : yāni bisāni tānyasyai prithivyai rūpam.¹

The earth has also been compared to curd which has an upper crust of cream well hardened, and the inner portion less solid and watery. The earth has the same formation.² Below its upper hardened crust, it has a semi-solid interior with water also inside it.

The earth has been well described in the Vishṇu-dharmottara-purāṇa as :

Apām adhistāl loko vai tasyopari mahidharāh.

Nāgānāmuparishṭād bhūh prithivyupari mānavāh.³

i. e., āpah are the first layer, the snakes come next called as mahidhara (this has similarity with the sarpa-rājñi name of the earth), bhu follows the mahidharas and the human beings are on the top of the earth.

THE ATMOSPHERE = ANTARIKSHA

The atmosphere was once known as ether on the basis of the Greek works. It was supposed to be an element or matter. It subsequently came to be considered as space having cosmic rays. Now, it is considered to have gases as well. An incomplete knowledge of the atmosphere does not help to understand the sun and the earth; these have an inter-relation. The magnetic field and the gravitation follow a pre-assigned formation. The relation between the sun and the rain is through the atmosphere or the middle regions.

These middle regions are elaborately detailed in the Vedic literature. Its formation has been described in the Vedas and the brāhmaṇas. The Prajāpati was pervading the āpah; he had evolved this earth. Agni or energy existing in the āpah had friction with the earth. Another similar egg-shaped formation took place. The womb of this egg-shaped formation caused the emergence of vāyu, and the shell of the egg (कपाल) became the middle region. Vāyu was the dominant factor in this region.

The universe as a whole was formed by Prajāpati or the golden-egg according to the purāṇas or Manusmṛiti. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the three lokas or regions are described to have been formed by the eggs formed out of the main original egg, and the atmosphere occupies the second place in the formation of the universe. It is mentioned in the Rigveda : nābhyāh āsīd antariksham,¹ i. e., the antariksha was formed out of the navel portion of Prajāpati.

So akāmayata prajāpatih. Bhūya eva syāt prajāyet iti. So agninā prithivīm mithunam samabhavat. Tatah āṇḍam samavartat. Tadabhyamṛisat. Pushyatu iti pushyatu. Bhūyo astu ityeva tadabravit.²

The vāyu in the atmosphere shines or burns. It has sharp brilliance in it. It has been explained by Yājñavalkya that agni shines through vital breath or gases, the vāyu through agni, the sun through vāyu and the moon through the sun.

Vayānsi, marīchi and paśu generate energy or agni in the atmosphere. The energised particles in them lend brilliance or burning power to this vāyu. The brilliance of vāyu mentioned in the Tāmdya Brāhmaṇa is also alluded to in the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa as :

- (a) Vāyoshṭvā tejasā, Sūryasya tvā varchasā.¹
- (b) Vāyorbhābhīh.²

The movement of this vāyu is never straight but slanting or horizontal. The magnetic region in the atmosphere created by the energised particles pervading it, change the course of the energised wind from the straight to slanting or horizontal direction. It is mentioned in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa :

Tasmād ayam vāyuh asmina antarikshe tiryāṇ pavate.³

The formation of vayānsi is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

Prajapatirha vā idamagra eka evāsa. Sa aikshata katham nu prajāyeyeti. So aśrāmyat. Sa tapo atapyata. Sa prajā asrijata. Tā asyā prajāḥ śrishtāḥ parābabhūvuh. Tānīmāni vayānsi. Purusho vai prajāpaternedishṭham. Dvipād vā ayam purushah. Tasmād dvipādo vayānsi.⁴

i. e., these vayānsi are the off-psrings of Prajāpati ; these have two feet like the two feet of purusha. Could this be equated with the positive and negative currents ?

Another intricate factor mentioned in their creation is also from the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa :

Marichi or shining specks in the air were born along with the formation of vāyu through the same process. These have flames as mentioned in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa as: marichayo visphulingah.²

MARUTAS

The middle regions abound with flashing particles or marutas. These have different series. The Tāmdya Brāhmaṇa refers to : gaṇeso hi marutah,³ i. e., there are series of these marutas. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, it is stated : sapta sapta hi marutā gaṇāh,⁴ i. e., series of these marutas or flashing particles are seven. Three other types of these are, sāntapana, grihamedhi and kṛīḍi. These marutas have electrical rays as stated in the Tāmdya Brāhmaṇa ; maruto raśmayah.⁵

The atmosphere is full of āpah. These flashing particles of energy form part of the āpah and reside in them. It is clear from the following references :

(a) Apsu vai marutah śritā.⁶

(b) Āpo vai marutah.⁷

i. e., these marutas are formed by the inter-mingling of the āpah in the middle regions and the agni and prithivi. An interesting fact about them is mentioned in the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa :

Maruto adbhīragnimatamayan. Tasya tāntasya hṛdayam ācdchhindan. Sā aśanirabhavat.⁸

The marutas have waves which move like the waves of the sea. These have rise and fall. Similar is the movement of the rays of agni and the sun. Some of these have long waves and the others have short waves. The marutas have short waves as mentioned in the Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa : Marutstomā vā eshah. Yāni kshudrāṇi chhandānsi tāni marutām.¹

The direction of these waves of the marutas is mentioned to be in the north in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa : tato maruto asṛijata īśānamukhāna.² Do these marutas face the north or it is a special series of them ?

These marutas have a white form in the middle regions or the atmosphere. The different directions in the atmosphere having whitish rays is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. The details are available in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa :

Tamasyām ūrdhvāyām diśi maruto anvaichchanna īśānamukhāh. Te anvavindan yat śvetam rūpam tat.³

The asuras had formed a white region in the atmosphere. It is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa : (asurāh) rajatām (purī) antariksham (akurvāt).⁴

Silver has white colour. These marutas have the white colour. These have energy in them and that energy lends them a white colour. These have their magnetic region in the atmosphere. These extend their sway to the earth, as well. Their magnetic region is formed on this earth also. These have a flame-tongue as mentioned in the Rigveda.⁵ These influence the different directions with great force. The different directions control their waves and guide their circulation.

PAŚUS or ENERGY PARTICLES in the ATMOSPHERE

A brief mention of the paśus or highly energised particles has already been made. These are born of prāṇa or gases,¹ *āpah*² and agni.³ These are mentioned in the Rigveda as formed of vāyu : paśūntāmśchakre vāyavyān,⁴ i. e., the Prajāpati created them of vāyu. The same occurrence is elaborated in the Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā :

Vāyurva antarikshasyādhyakshah. Antarikshadevatyāh paśavah. Vāyure-vainān antarikshāya paridadāti,⁵

i. e., vāyu is the commander of the middle regions. The physical forces in that region have energised particles. Vāyu creates them for this region. It is also mentioned in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa : paśavo vā antariksham.⁶ In the same brāhmaṇa these are described as having four strings or feet.⁷ In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, these are of five parts.⁸ These also have at times two currents.⁹ Marutas are, as well, paśus.¹⁰ These are also called dyutāna māurta.¹¹ These are full of energy according to *Kapishthala-kāṭha-saṁhitā*¹² and Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā :

These are mentioned as grāvāṇa. These particles have brilliance and they shine, as these are born of agni and maruta :

Tato revatayah paśavo asṛijyanta¹ and āgneyaścha mārutaścha paśū.²

Tvashtā or the creator of the living beings lends brilliance to the paśus : tvashṭā vai paśūnām mithunānām rūpakṛita, rupapatih.³ Eight types of these paśuas are mentioned in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa : ashṭātayan paśūn.⁴ Āpah and salila or water is equated with these paśus. as electricity is also generated from water. Created in the middle regions, these traverse the earth and the heavenly regions.

There are different types of energy particles. How could this happen? The particles of vāyu, āpah, agni and prithivī generate friction in the middle regions. Their waves cause varied intensity which lends them different identification names as aśva, vṛishabha etc. The different formations are explicit from the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa :

Ūnātirikto mithunau prajanantī. Ūnam anyasya atiriktam anyasya. Ūnātiriktād vai mithunāt prajā paśavah prajāyante.⁵

i. e., low and high energy particles cause varied intensity. The other names are : aśva, rāsabha, ajā, vṛishabha, nara, mṛigī etc. as : aśvah prathamō atha rāsasbho athājah.⁶ Their ten forms related to these paśus of the atmosphere are mentioned in the Nighaṇṭu.⁷

These have similarities as well. The similar currents due to the āpah can be connected to each other. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa explains this fact as :

Tasmādu haitat paśūh svāya rūpāya āvirbhavatīti. Gaurvā gave, Aśvo vā aśvāya. Purusho vā purushāya.⁸

THE BRĀHMANAS

Tāṃdya Brāhmaṇa mentions them as red colour : etadvai paśūnam bhuyishṭham rūpam yad rohitam.¹ The same fact is mentioned in the Kapishṭhala-kaṭha-saṃhitā : tasmād rohitarūpam paśavo bhuyishṭhah.² The agni and āpah particles are enwrapped. The marutas are also have their series enwrapped in them. But these paśus are having independent waves and are separate according to the Tāṃdya Brāhmaṇa : tasmad asamśliṣṭāḥ paśavah.³

DEVATĀS

Devatās are the recipients of the oblations offered in the sacrifices according to the brāhmaṇas. Devatās are of two types, those who are best among human beings and those who are divine beings and are equated with the physical powers. Those who have knowledge of the Vedas, are well read and full of wisdom, are devas among men. It is also mentioned that a person desiring to have an intelligent son should practise penance for a year. Those best among men are called devas. The following references are available in the brāhmaṇas and other allied literature ;

- (a) Ye brāhmaṇah śuśruvāṃso anūchānāste manushyadevāḥ.⁴
- (b) Vidvāṃso hi devāḥ.⁵
- (c) Atha yadi kāmayet devam janayeyamiti saṃvatsarametadvratam charet.⁶

This fact was known to Appollonius, a Greek traveller, who writes in his travel account, 'The Emperor next asked the question : Why is it that men call you a God ? 'Because,' answered Appollonius,

‘every man that is thought to be good, is honoured by the title of god.’ I have shown in my narrative of India how this tenet passed into our hero’s philosophy.¹

The devas are differentiated from ordinary men and both have been living at the same time :

(d) Ubhaye ha vā a idamagre sahāsurdevāścha manushyāścha.²

Besides, these best amongst men; the physical forces also have agni as the first and Vishṇu as the last devatā (दिव्य गुण-युक्त). In between them are enumerated a large number of physical forces of the middle regions, whom the sacrificial oblations are offered. These are ordained to follow a set course. Indra or energy is the most powerful force amongst them :

(e) Satyasamhitā vai devāh.³

(f) Indro vai devānāmojishṭho balishṭhah.⁴

While describing these devas, the brāhmaṇas have narrated the story of the creation of the universe. The properties of the elements of the middle regions have been detailed in them. A clear understanding of the meta-physical meaning of these references in the brāhmaṇas could help us understand the scientific knowledge contained in them. The qualities, the properties and the form of these forces needs to be completely grasped. The subtle knowledge of these brāhmaṇas could help solve many intricate problems of the universe.

YAJÑAS

Performance of a sacrifice is considered to be the best sacred duty. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa explains hymn 1.1 of the Yajurveda as :

1 Philostratus, A life of Appollonius, Book VIII, Ch VI, Vol. II, p. 281, ed. by F.C. Conybeare, yajño vai shreshṭhatamam karma.¹ Kāṭhaka-saṁhita has a similar reference. These brāhmaṇas attach importance to their performance and had even equated Brahma as the sacrifice personified. The visible personified sacrifice in this world is accepted as Prajāpati by these works. It is mentioned : esha vai pratyaksham yajño yatprajāpatih.² Sun is considered to be the focus of all the sacrifices being performed in the inanimate world : sa yah sa yajño asau sa ādityah.³ A sacrifice is equated with the sun, here. Human beings create the form of this sacrifice on this earth and an altar is its focal point. It is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa :

Tam (yajñam) yavedymāmanvavidan yadvedyamāmanvavindamstadveddereditvam.⁴

i. e., the sacrifice was received in that altar and as it was received in the altar, it is the focal point. Similar references are available in the other brāhmaṇas. An altar may be small or large, but the sacrifice performed in it has a wonderful effect. The altar is also alluded to as Vishnu in a diminutive form. It is detailed in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁵ This vast universe was created by the physical forces through these sacrifices. It is possible for the human beings to gain control over the three regions by performing sacrifices. It is stated in the famous hymn of the Rigveda that the oblations offered to the devas in this small altar have effect on the three regions :

Idam vishṇurvichakrame tredhā nidadhe padam.⁶

Besides the above meaning of this hymn, it has a reference to the Brahmā and sun, as well. Agni is, therefore, considered as the primary physical force and sun as the final. The fire in the altar receives the first oblation. It is mentioned in the brāhmaṇas :

(a) Agnirvai devānāmavamo vishṇuh paramah.¹

(b) Agnirvai devatānām mukham.²

i. e., this agni is the first amongst the physical forces. The oblation offered in it rises towards the sun with the help of the wind. It traverses the middle regions. Intermingling with the rays of the sun in the middle regions, it descends with the clouds satisfying all the physical forces. A sacrifice helps purify the earth, the middle regions and the rays of the sun. How this happens could be grasped by an intensive study of the brāhmaṇas ? A sacrifice not only purifies but does great well being of the human beings. It is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa :

Kalpate yajño api tasyai janatāyai kalpate yatraivam vidvān hotā bhavati.³

There are many forms of these sacrifices. Agnihotra and Aśva-medha are all considered as sacrifice. The main feature discernible is that the actions in the universe are repeated in a sacrifice. It helps understand the laws of nature and vice versa also helps the laws of nature. The sun through its rays eliminates bad smell and purifies water. An agnihotra performed by human beings serves the same purpose. A year is considered to have 360 days, a human body has 360 bones, 360 bricks are used in the erection of an altar, these laws are pre-ordained.

MAIN FORMS of YAJÑAS

The main forms of yajñas are mentioned in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, pūrva - bhāga, wherein twenty - one liturgical courses forming basis or essentials of a sacrifice are mentioned. The subject is treated at length in the sūtra literature. A sacrifice is considered to consist of tri-vṛita or a threefold stoma in which first the three first verses of each richā are sung together, then the second verses and lastly the third verses are sung. It has seven tantus or succession of sacrificial performances. The twenty one courses forming basis of a sacrifice are mentioned as :

- (a) Sa etam trivṛitam sapta-tantum-ekaviṁśati-saṁstham yajñamapaśyat.¹
- (b) Sapta sutyāḥ sapta cha pāka-yajñāḥ havir-yajñāḥ sapta tathaika-viṁśati.²

The twenty one successive sacrificial performances are formed of seven soma-saṁsthās, seven pāka-yajñas and seven havir-yajñas. Their details are :

Soma-saṁsthās : Agnishṭoma, Atyagnishṭoma. Ukthya, Shodāśi, Atirātra, Aptoryāma, and Vājapeya.

Pāka-yajñas : Aṣṭakā, Pārvaṇa-sthālī-pāka, Māsika-śrāddha, Piṇḍa-pitṛi-śrāvaṇī, Āgrahāyaṇī, Chaitrī, Āśvayujī.

Havir-yajñas : Agnyādhāna, Agni-hotra, Darśa-pūrṇa-māsa, Chāturmāsya, Nirūḍa-paśu-bandha and Sautrāmaṇī.³

Names of a few sacrifices are mentioned also in the Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa :

- (c) Agnihotram darśa-pūrṇa-māsau chāturmāsyaṇi, paśubandham saumyam-adhvaram,⁴

Besides, other minor and major sacrifices found mentioned are only a part of these twenty one courses of essentials of sacrifices. The sacrifices in succession mentioned in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa are :

Performance of a sacrifice or agnihotra helps a wise person to get rid of his evil acts :

He who performs the āśvamedha sacrifice gets rid of all the evil acts of killing those who have the knowledge of the Vedas :

THE BRĀHMANAS

Who has enemies is full of evils. He who has senses is rid of the evils if he performs sacrifices for these senses. Performing a sacrifice, a person imbibes pure senses in his body :

(e) *Am̐hasā vā esha grihito yo bhrāṭṛivyaṇāṁhasa eva tena muchyate yadindrāyendriyavata indriyameva tenātmandhatte.*¹

He who performs the paurṇamāsa sacrifice, destroys all the evils. He purifies and commences to act :

(f) *Tathaivaitadyajamānah paurṇamāsenaiṇa vṛitram pāpmānam hatvā-pahatapāpmaitatkarmārabhate.*²

He who performs a sacrifice is able to destroy the evils. Whose evils have been destroyed, should be brought near the water.

(g) *Pāpmānam haisha hanti yo yajate tamimam pāpmānam hatamapo harāṇīti.*³

Performing a sacrifice, he is able to destroy an enemy, an enemy full of evils. On the other hand, he himself gains prosperity by praying through a sacrifice :

(h) *Tena pāpmānam bhrāṭṛivyaṇa stṛiṇute vasiyānātmanā bhavati etayā stute.*⁴

It is evident that the performance of a sacrifice helps to destroy all the evils. Effect of a sacrifice is much enhanced by the recitation of hymns. Recitation of hymns lends peace to the mind. Correct and accented recitation of hymns generates the same cycle in the atmosphere as created at the time of the creation of the universe, when the hymns were revealed. The importance of the recitation of the hymns during a sacrifice has been elaborated in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa as :

(i) *Etadvai yajñasya samṛiddham yad-rūpa-samṛiddham yatkarma-kriyamāṇamṛigabhi-vadati.*⁵

1 अंहासा वा एष गृहीतो यो भ्रातृव्यवानंहस एव तेन मुच्यते यदिन्द्रायेन्द्रियवत इन्द्रियमेव तेनात्मन्धत्ते, 10.10, KS

5 एतद्वै यज्ञस्य समृद्धं यद्रूपसमृद्धं यत्कर्मक्रियमाणमृगभिवदति, 1.4.3, AB

The abundance of yajñas lends abundance to the manifestation of the greatness of the Creator. This particular act is corroborated by the richā. Hymns of the Vedas not only support the action, but their recitation causes changes in the atmosphere. Understanding the meaning of richā lends solace to the mind and the correct recitation adds greater joy.

Sacrifices of animals etc. during the yajñas are mentioned in the brāhmaṇas. This development is of later periods. A reference in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa clearly states that only vegetation is suitable for the performance of yajñas :

Agnirhyeva yajño vanaspatiryajñīya iti vanaspatayo hi yajñīyā na hi manushyā yajñerannyadvanaspatayo na syustasmādāha vanaspatiryajñīya iti.¹

i. e., agni is sacrifice personified and only vegetation is proper for a sacrifice. Human beings could not have performed sacrifices or yajñas in the absence of the vegetation, therefore, only vegetation is suitable for the performance of a sacrifice.

SOUL and CYCLE of REBIRTH

The basic tenets of Vedic religion are the existence of the Almighty God, the soul and the cycle of birth and rebirth. All beings have an existence here after and are born again and again till the attainment of immortality, which is achieved through extreme penance and by leading a life of renunciation. The existence of the soul and cycle of birth and death is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

Atha yatra suptvā punarnāvadrāsyānbhavati. Tadvāchayati punarmanah punarāyurma āganpunah prāṇah punarātmā ma āganpunaśchakshuh punah śrotram ma āganniti. (Yajurveda, 4.15) Sarve ha vā aete svapato aapakrāmantiprāṇa eva na. Tairevaitatsuptvā punah saṁgachchate. Tasmādāha-punarmanah...²

2 अथ यत्र सुप्त्वा पुनर्नावद्रास्यन्भवति । तद्वचयति पुनर्मनः पुनरायुर्म आगन्पुनः प्राणः पुनरात्मा म आगन्पुनश्चक्षुः पुनः श्रोत्रं म आगन्निति । (यजुः 4.5) सर्वे ह वा एते स्वपतो अपक्रामन्ति प्राण एव न । तैरेवैतत्सुप्त्वा पुनः संगच्छते । तस्मादाह—पुनर्मनः....., 3.2.2.23, ŚB

i. e., after his sleep the sacrificer does not want to sleep again. The priest then asks him to repeat the next hymn as, 'I should attain mind and age again. I should attain prāṇa and ātmā (soul) again. I should get eyes, and ears. These are all lost while in sleep and prāṇa alone is not away from the body. The prāṇa again unites with him after the sleep.

This particular hymn supports the fundamental principle of rebirth. Exponents of the brāhmaṇas had supported their explanations through hymns. The explanation of the hymn clearly corroborates the same idea praying that the prāṇa should again be attained. If the prāṇa was throughout in action, its reattainment was not necessary. Reattainment of prāṇa implies rebirth.

Another hymn of Yajurveda explains that during the sleep of a human being all senses are action-less and go to sleep, except prāṇa or breath : tatra jāgrito asvapnajau satrasadau cha devau,¹ i. e., when all the senses are sleeping only prāṇa and apāna, the two devas, who do not sleep, are only awake. Therefore, the hymn refers to that state when the prāṇa also is not in existence and it is prayed that it should again be attained. This state is of another birth only. The explanation in the brāhmaṇa corroborates the existence of the soul and attaining another birth in another human body. The same brāhmaṇa again states :

(a) Ātmā vai mano hṛdayam prāṇah,² i. e., soul is the mind and heart is the prāṇa.

(b) Daśa vā aime purushe prāṇā ātmā-ekādaśo yasminnete prāṇāh pratishṭhitā etāvānvai purushah.³

i. e., a human body has ten prāṇas and eleventh is the soul. The prāṇas are sustained by soul and they complete the human body. Eggeling translates ātmā as body, which is incorrect. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa further refers :

i. e., who are the rudras. These are ten prāṇas in a human body and the soul is the eleventh. When these discard a human body, these make persons weep and lament.

It is clearly stated here that the ten prāṇas and the eleventh soul leave this body on the death of a human being. The fundamental principle of Rebirth has already been alluded to in brief. The other references are :

(a) Sa yatsāyamastamite dve aāhuti juhōti. i. e., by performing a sacrifice, it is possible for a person to conquer the repeated cycle of birth and death. He who performs a sacrifice, is devatā personified. Agni, a manifestation of Prajāpati, never dies. All objects having special qualities are his manifestation. A person by performing a sacrifice in agni himself attains the special quality.

Repeated allusions to death again implies that the fundamental of the Vedic religion of Rebirth was an accepted tenet. The following hymn of the Yajurveda further explains the same subject :

(f) Asuryyā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛitāh.

Tāmste pretyāpi gachchhanti ye ke chātmahano janāh.³

It is stated in the Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā : asuryo vā etā yadosha-dhayāh.⁴ It means that those who commit suicide are born as vegetation enwrapped with drakness etc. The idea of rebirth is alluded to in the Vedas, as well.

These nine references from the Veda and the brāhmaṇas, etc. clearly refer to the fundamental principle of Rebirth. It is also mentioned that by performing sacrifices a person gets a bright future in his next birth : Sa ha sarvatanūreva yajamāno amushmimloke sambhavati.¹ Persons are born after their death either in another world or in this world itself. Most of these references are from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa of Yājñavalkya who was a great scholar not only of the physical forces of creation but also of the meta-physical aspect of the vedic religion, as well.

LIFE SPAN

Besides enunciating the principle of rebirth, the brāhmaṇas refer to the life span of human beings which was considered to be hundred years on an average. It is expressly stated that the life of a human being is hundred years. It is also stated that a human being could live for more than hundred years. The references available are :

(a) Śatāyurvai purushah;²

(b) Api hi bhūyāmsi śatādvarshebhyah purusho jīvati.³

i. e., the life span of human beings was considered to be hundred years, but one could live for more than hundred years, as well. How this was possible is also mentioned in the brāhmaṇas. It is specifically laid down that the agnihotra should never be performed before the sunrise. Day was always considered to be sacred; performance of a yajña during the day resulted in the ending of the evils and bad actions. He who performs a yajña before the sun-rise never lives for hundred years and he who performs a sacrifice after the sun-rise though may not attain immortality, still lives to enjoy full life. The fact is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

(a) Martyāḥ pitarāḥ purā hāyusho mīyate yo anudīte manthatyapahata-pāpmāno devā apa pāpmānam hate amṛitā devā nāmṛitatvasyāśāsti sarvamāyureti.⁴ life span. He who knows the fact and acts accordingly attains his complete age as :

(b) Āyushe kamagnihotram hūyate. Sarvamāyureti ya evam veda.¹

Control over diet is an essential factor for long life. Excessive flesh on the body shortens the life span. It is caused by eating very often. It was, therefore, laid down in the brāhmaṇas that a person who eats only twice a day, once in the morning and then in the evening, attains the full age, i. e., of hundred years. A curious fact mentioned is that the animals do not transgress the laws of nature but the human beings always go against them. Therefore, it was laid down for them to eat only twice a day, as :

(c) Naiva devā atikrāmanti. Na pitaro na paśavo manushyā evaika atikrāmanti tasmādyo manushyāṇām medyatyaśubhe medyati. Vihurchhati hi na hyayanāya cha na bhavatyāṇṛitam hi kṛtvā medyati. Tasmādu sāyamprātarāśyeva syātsa yo haivam vidvāntsāyamprātarāśī bhavati sarvam haivāyureti.²

(d) Sāyam prātarvai manushyāṇām devahitamaśanam.³

He, who considered agni and vāyu as possessed of life and as giving life, always attained full life span and never died early. The fact is mentioned in the Maitrāyaṇī-saṁhitā :

(e) Yo ha vai devānāmāyushmataśchāyushkṛitaścha veda sarvamāyureti na purāyushah pramiyate.⁴

It was considered possible to increase the life span by practising prāṇāyāma. The physical forces, considered as prāṇa, were accepted as possessed of life and giving life :

(f) Ete vai devā āyushmantaśchāyushkṛitaścha yadime prāṇah.⁵

Old age is the end of life. It was not advisable to exhaust bodily energy. It was considered possible to achieve the average life span and lengthen it by preserving the bodily energy which is compared to hundred coins of gold, as :

(g) Jarā vai devahitamāyustāvatrhi samā jivati.....Āyushā vā esha vīryeṇa vyridhyate yo agnimutsādayate. Śatāyurvai puruṣaśśatavīryam āyurvīryam hiraṇyam yadhirāṇyam śatamānam dadātyāyureva vīryam punarālabheta.¹

In Vedic literature, life span is always compared to gold. Use of golden ornaments touching the body is considered to lengthen the life span. It has been mentioned :

(h) Hiraṇyamabhivyanitvāyurvai hiraṇyamāyushaivātmānamabhidhinoti.²

(i) Yo bibharti dākshāyaṇam hiraṇyam sa jiveshu kṛiṇute dīrghamāyuh.³

It is mentioned that to lengthen the life of a sick person, his mouth should be opened and breath should be put into his mouth. Such a patient will not die and shall live for his full life span, as :

(j) Yam kāmayedāmayāvinam jivediti tam vyādāyābhivyanitvādamṛitenaivainaṁabhivyaniti jivati sarvamāyureti na purāyushah pramiyate.⁴

The authors of the brāhmaṇas had considered hundred years or more as life span as essential to a human being and have stated :

(k) Pūrṇam grihṇīyādyaṁ kāmayeta sarvamāyuriyāditi pūrṇamevāsmā āyurgrihṇāti sarvamāyureti.⁵

A few other factors which contribute to lengthen the life span are that a person should never rub the two feet together, which causes cross currents in the body shortening his longevity. Similarly, one should not scratch the head simultaneously with the finger tips of the two hands. Human beings should never sleep or lie down with their head to the north. This causes penetration of a magnetic field into the body again shortening the life. It may, however be mentioned that there are many more principles, observance of which leads to a happy and long life.

HAPPY MARRIED LIFE

The brāhmaṇas lay special stress on how to lead a happy life for hundred years. These brāhmaṇas refer to early life of celibacy or brahamcharya. Such references are few as the main theme of these works is to detail the meta-physical aspect of the universe. A principle for leading a happy life is to perform yajñas or sacrifices. Results of actions of previous births could be changed by the performance of yajñas. It is specifically laid down that one who performs yajñas, could never be afflicted by disease. The effect is not limited to a particular human being who performs yajñas but their performance has the effect on the whole nation, as well. These sacrifices have to be performed by a person having a family and the wife has to take part in it. As such the best description of family life available in the brāhmaṇas, is not available elsewhere.

The brāhmaṇas mention that illness and diseases afflict the human beings at the time of the conjunction of the seasons. Such diseases could possibly be warded off by the use of special types of herbs by a performer of yajñas. During such periods, he should use apāmārga or achyranthes aspera which is especially useful to kill the germs. It has been stated in the brāhmaṇas :

(a) Ritusamdhishu hi vyādhirjāyate.¹

(b) Ritusamdhishu vai vyādhirjāyate.²

(c) Yadapāmārgahomo bhavati rakshsāmapahatyai.³

It is necessary to destroy the disease-spreading germs and insects. These could be killed by agni or its substances which are like gold, rays of the sun, the tree called gmelina arborea or kārshmaryya, water, the accented hymns of Sāmaveda and a brāhmaṇa;

- (d) Aginirhi Rakshsāmapahantā.¹
- (e) Agnervā aetadreto yadhiranyam nāshṭrāṇām rakshsāmapahatyai.²
- (f) Sūryo hi nāshṭrāṇām rakshasāmapahantā.³
- (g) Te (devāh) etam rakshohanam vanaspatimapasyan kārshmaryam.⁴
- (h) Brāhmaṇo hi rakshsāmapahantā.⁵
- (i) Sāmahi nāshṭrāṇām rakshsāmapahantā.⁶
- (j) Āpo vai rakshoghni.⁷

It is clear that fire, rays of the sun, apāmārga or achyranthes aspera, kārshmaryya or gmelina arborea kill the germs of diseases. Even today these are helpful in killing germs. These germs generate diseases and shorten the life span. In order to increase the human life span, the brāhmaṇas suggest the above remedies. Wearing golden ear-rings always meant to ward off disease and add to long life. A person performing yajñas could ward off personal as well as diseases affecting the whole nation. The life span of hundred years implies that nobody should die earlier. A son should never die during the life time of the father. A happy family consisted of parents and the children who never died during the life-time of the parents. The brāhmaṇas also emphasise that each family must have a son. Without a son bliss is not attained. Dependent on the son, the parents lead a happy old age :

(l) Tasmāduttaravayase putrānpitopajivati.¹

A person not having a son on account of his actions in the past life, should perform yajñas to be blessed with a son. Performance of the Putreshṭi yajña is a penance to get rid of the bad actions of the previous births.

A son and other children could become intelligent. It is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, he, who eats in the presence of his wife cannot give birth to a very healthy son. A wife gives birth to a very strong son whose husband does not eat in her presence. The wife should, similarly, not eat in the presence of the husband as expressed in the same brāhmaṇa :

(m) Tasmājjāyā ante nāśnīyādvīryavānhāsmājjāyate vīryavantamu ha sā janayati yasyā ante nāśnāti.²

(n) Tasmādimā mānushya striystira ivaiva puṁso jighatsanti.³

This has been the practice in our country even a few decades earlier. The effect of modern culture has caused its upsetting. But it is prescribed in the Mānava and Vārāha-grīhya-sūtras that husband and wife should take meals in the same utensils.

The rituals described in the brāhmaṇas on the basis of the Vedic hymns have been elaborated in grīhya sūtras. It is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa that a new born son should be named very early :

(o) Tasmātputrasya jātasya nāma kuryāt.⁴

the breast is smaller as compared to the hips and whose waist is narrow, is praise worthy. Who has wide and fleshy hips is praised by menfolk. A lady having charming features is the beloved of men. The beauty of ladies lies in their beautiful long hair, wide forehead and hips. Family life is dependent on both the husband and the wife. To ensure a happy family life, the qualities of a wife and her rights have been described in the brāhmaṇas :

- (a) Evamiva hi yoshām praśamsanti prithuśroṇirvimṛṣhāntarāmsā madhye samgrāhyeti.¹
- (b) Paśchādvarīyaś prithuśroṇiriti vai yoshām praśamsanti.²

- (d) Etadu vai yoshāyai samṛiddham rūpam yat sukaparddā sukaparddā sukurīrā svaupaśā.⁴

A man should marry a wife possessing all these good qualities because, if married, he is not entitled to perform a yajña without a wife :

- (e) Ayajño vā esha. Yo apatnikah.⁵

A wife is half the portion of a man's life and is therefore, called a better-half. The idea had deep roots in the hearts of the Aryans and their ladies enjoyed the maximum respect. They were personified prosperity as stated;

- (f) Atho ardho vā esha ātmanah. Yatpatni.⁶
- (g) Śriyā vā etadrūpam yatpatnyah.⁷

Ladies unable to practise celibacy have to be discarded, not in family life but, while performing special yajñas, as stated :

Nature of woman is aptly analysed in the brāhmaṇas while mentioning that women cherish meaningless conversation and are fond of singers and dancers, as :

The brāhmaṇas refer to the vocation of woman as knitting cotton and wool :

(m) Tadvā aetatstriṇām karma yadūṇāsūtram.⁶

Observance of fidelity was considered of importance. Following the vedic view, the brāhmaṇas laid special stress on the importance of wives following their husbands. The priest enquires of the wife as with whom she has relations. If she has relations with a person other than her husband, she commits a sinful act and if concealing such desires, should not offer oblation. If she admits her guilt, the effect of the sinful act is lessened and it is more or less truth. If she does not admit, it causes harm to those who are her relations and whom she wishes well :

Even if the husband is not possessed of good qualities, it is the bounden duty of a wife to follow him. An emphatic expression by Sukanyā to follow her husband to whom she was given in marriage by her father is mentioned in Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as :

(o) Sā (Sukanyā) hovācha yasmai mām pitā adānnaivāham tam jivantam hāsyāmi.²

i.e., Sukanyā spoke to the two Āśvi brothers, 'my father has married me to my husband and I shall not leave him as long as he is alive.' In his Bāla-kṛīdā commentary, Viśvarūpa elucidates it further and states that a person strong enough to live should not be discarded by his wife :

(p) Evam cha satyāmnāyā api kṣatṛiyaviśayā eva naivāham tam jivantam hāsyāmi, ityādi.³

It is stated in the same brāhmaṇa that for a wife, husband is her honour and her staying in the house is her quality :

(q) Patayo hyeva striyai pratishṭhā.⁴

(r) Gṛihā vai patnyai pratishṭhā.⁵

It is not to be presumed that wives in those ages were only ornaments of the house-hold. Their knowledge of the religion and taking part in religious discussions was a speciality. Gārgī is most famous of all of them. Ordinarily, ladies seldom took part in meetings, as :

A reference from Kāṭhaka Brāhmaṇa in the Vāsishṭha-dharma-sūtra relates to those husbands who cannot practise celibacy even when their wives are fast approaching child-birth; their wives were ordained to sleep with their husbands, as :

(t) Api nah śvo vijanishyamāṇāḥ patibhiḥ saha śayīranniti strīṇāmindradatto vara iti.²

Killing ones wife was a heinous crime. Prajāpati spoke to the devatās not to kill ladies. It is also mentioned that a lady never kills a person :

(u) Na vai strīyam ghnanti.³

(v) Na vai yoshā kanchan hinasti.⁴

Sale of girls was abominable. In certain regions of the country, such a practice appears to have been prevalent as it is stated that the father of a girl should be paid hundred coins and a chariot and who has been purchased by the husband commits a sinful act if she has relations with another person :

(w) Tasmādduhitṛimate adhiratham śatam deyam ittha krayo vijñāyate.⁵

Marriage with a daughter who has no brother was not considered proper as the son of such a girl is normally adopted by her parents. It is stated in the Nirukta (3.5) on the basis of a brāhmaṇa or samhitā of the Bhāllavis and also referred to by Viśvarūpa in his commentary called Bāla-kṛidā :

(z) Nābhrāṭṛīmupayachchheta tattokam hyasya bhavati, iti bhāllavinām śrute.¹

Another reference from a brāhmaṇa is quoted in the Vāsishtā-dharma-sūtra stating that a girl without a brother returns back to her parental family and behaves as their son, as :

(aa) Vijnāyate—abhrāṭṛikā pumsah pitṛiṇabhyeti pratichinam gachchhati putratvam.²

ACTIONS : CAUSE and EFFECT

Man is restless. He is never inactive. The actions are both good and bad. These have a cause and effect. One is not immune from facing the result. What are evil acts? The universe, a manifestation of the Almighty, is governed by certain basic truths; if upset, these in turn disturb advancement of human beings. The universe, has mainly thirty three Gods like fire, air, water, sun, etc. Their unlimited use for human benefit leads to their progress; but wilful disturbance like keeping the fire impure, polluting the air or water or the rays of the sun, are sinful actions resulting in evil effects on the person committing such acts.

A person leading a haphazard life, wilfully not acquiring knowledge, telling lies, interfering with the fundamentals of nature, is committing evil actions and has to reap their result. The evil actions are detailed in the brāhmaṇas. Such actions cause pain and sufferance and all persons have to face the results of the actions of their past and present births. These brāhmaṇas also mention the methods to avoid them and get rid of their bad effects.

THE BRĀHMAṆAS

A means to wipe out sorrow is to perform yajñas. It is possible to rule over the whole universe by performing yajñas. Immense strength can be drawn from the nature by performing yajñas on the full-moon day, considered to be especially auspicious. All the sinful acts and methods to get rid of them were once mentioned in the brāhmaṇas, most of these having been lost, the available information on them is limited and scanty. It is stated :

(a) Brāhmaṇoktā vidhayasteshāmutsanāh pāṭhā prayogādānumīyante.¹

Viśvarūpa has also stated that most of these informations are now lost;

(b) Śākhānām viprakīrṇatvāt puruṣhānām pramādatah.
Nānā prakaraṇasthatvat smṛitimūlam na grihyate.²

These brāhmaṇas are great advocates of yajñas. It is desirable that there is no interruption in their performance. Similarly, great stress is laid on truthfulness; the hymns specially elaborate this basic principle of life. Those who speak lies are considered impure by the brāhmaṇas. The speech of a person who tells a lie has no effect. He who tells a lie, kindles fire with water and looses his lusture :

(c) Amedhyo vai puruṣho yadanṛitam vadati.³

(d) Etadvāchaśchhidram yadanṛitam.⁴

(e) Atha yo anṛitam vadati yathāgnim samiddham tamudakenābhishīñchedeḥ hainam ha jāsayati tasya kaniyah kaniya eva tejo bhavati śvah śvah pāpiyān bhavati tasmādu satyameva vadet.⁵

It is stated in the Taittirīya-saṁhitā that while performing a yajña one should not tell a lie, or eat meat or sleep with a lady; instead one should be celibate, even if married. One should not sleep on a bed after offering an animal as oblation; should not eat meat; and should be celibate :

(f) Nānṛitam vadenna māṁsamaśṇīyānna śṛīyāmupeyāt.¹

(g) Naitena paśuneshtvopari śayīta na māṁsamaśṇīyānna mithuna-mupeyāt.²

Rita and satya are distinguished in the hymns. The same distinction in their meaning is referred to in the brāhmaṇas. However, anṛita and asatya are synonyms. While explaining the meaning of hymn 12.14 of Yajurveda, it is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa that rita means satya :

(h) Ṛitamiti satyam.³

What is satya or truth ? To narrate a fact as seen or heard, is to speak the truth. Satya or truth is supported by eyes and in a dispute a person saying that I have seen with my own eyes, is believed by all :

(i) Chakshurvā ṛitam tasmādyataro vivadamānayorāhāhamanushṭhayā chakshushādarśamiti tasya śraddadhāti.⁴

By speaking the truth a person is drawn towards heaven :

(j) Ṛitenaivainam svargam lokam gamayanti.⁵

Satya or truth comprises of the three-fold knowledge of the Vedas, therefore, to study the Veda is a truthful path. His glory cannot be faded who speaks the truth. To sum up, whatever is not truth is a lie and an evil act :

Laying stress on truthfulness, the brāhmaṇas mention many other evil acts. It is prescribed that a brāhmaṇa should not drink and should not be born of sin. Drinking wine is condemned as it leads to quarrel between the old and the young, and daughter-in-law and the father-in-law. A brāhmaṇa has to learn and teach and drinking wine is a hindrance in it :

(m) Tasmādbrahmaṇah surām na pibet. Pāpmanātmānam netsaṁsrijā iti.²

Ājigarta had committed a heinous crime and repented for selling his child. His own evil act caused him great sufferance :

(p) Sa hovāchājigartah Sauyavasih :

Abortion was considered a great sin according to brāhmaṇas as mentioned in the Bāla-kṛīḍā commentary :

i. e., by performing an Agnishṭoma yajña, it is possible to be absolved of the sin of abortion.

It was considered to be a sin to have intercourse with a lady in her menstrual period, as stated in Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

(s) Ātreyyā yoshitainasvi.²

As quoted in the Āpastamba-dharma-sūtra from a brāhmaṇa, he whose teacher is without knowledge and is offered a sacred thread or Yajñopavīta by him, enters darkness from darkness. Acquisition of knowledge was a great achievement among the Āryas and those without knowledge were condemned :

(t) Tamaso vā esha tamah praviśati yamavidvānupanayate yaśchāvidvān, iti hi brāhmaṇam.³

Affliction by disease is the result of sins of the past births and for transgressing the fundamentals of nature and health. It is stated in the Kāṭhaka-saṃhitā :

(u) Pāpmanaisha gṛhīto ya āmayāvi.⁴

It was considered undesirable to receive meals from one who has been ordained and to utter bad language or accept names. In the Āpastamba-dharma-sūtra on the basis of a reference from a brāhmaṇa, it is stated that one should not take meals from a person who is inimical or who is acting in an inimical manner. One should not take meals from a person who discusses the knowledge of yajñas in a faulty manner or has acted like that. Partaking meals from such a person amounts to eating meals full of sin. Irrational criticism of religion was a sin :

Good and bad actions have their effect and result. Good and pure deeds cause happiness and bad and sinful deeds lead to misery. Salvation from misery lies in penance and performing yajñas.

RAIN FALL

Rain fall, its cause and effect, is well described by the exponents of the brāhmaṇas who had exhaustive knowledge of this scientific subject. The primary cause is formation of smoke by fire, formation of clouds by smoke, and clouds in turn cause rain. Fire or heat cause the rainy clouds move towards the sky. Heat of the sun causes rain. Force of air helps rain to fall on the earth. The easterly rays of the sun also cause rain :

Like the black coloured clouds causing rain, if either one or two bullocks of the chariot of soma are black, it rains. What is soma and the two bullocks of his chariot ? The expression in the brāhmaṇas is not further explained. However, black colour and similar objects are associated with rain fall.

Another factor that causes rain is wind, which is the propelling force for it. The formation of clouds takes place on account of wind which causes them to move in its own direction and rules over the rain fall or the monsoon season. It has been stated in the brāhmaṇas :

(f) Ayam vai varshasyeṣṭe yo ayam pavate.³

THE BRĀHMAṆAS

On this earth, agni or heat causes rain. Kāriri Yajña praised in the Śrauta Sūtras is mentioned in the brāhmaṇas. Performance of this yajña causes rain to fall. The same fact is repeated in the Maitrāyaṇi Samhitā. These yajñas related to the soma are called Kāriri. The oblations in the Kāriri yajña related to soma causes rain to fall on this earth from the atmosphere :

(k) Saumyāni vai karīrāṇi saumī ha u tvevāhutiramuto vṛiṣṭim chyāvayati.¹

i. e., it is prescribed to perform a yajña with the rain-water as, this water is very near to the eatables. A person desiring to have rain should perform a yajña. It is the wind that carries the clouds.

The water in the clouds destroys them as their force or heaviness makes them shed it. It is stated :

(m) Āpo ha vai vṛitram jaghnustenaivaitadvīryeṇāpah syandante.³

(n) Etasyāmupadīchyāndīśi bhūyishṭham vidyotate.⁴

While describing the rain clouds, the brāhmaṇas mention lightening, as well, which mostly shines in the north direction and is the lustre of water :

Another factor mentioned in the Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa is the loud noise which causes the clouds to shed water :

The rain fall and its causes were well known to the Aryans. Varāhamihira, in his Bṛihat-saṁhitā has specially treated this subject. The rain water purified by yajñas further purifies food and other waters. Pure food and water help build a healthy body and end diseases; such a body performs all actions. The exponents of the brāhmaṇas had devoted themselves to the subject and details of the science of rain fall.¹

RIVETTING of METALS

It is stated in the pūrva-bhāga of the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa to rivet gold and silver with salt and gold respectively :

(a) Lavanena suvarṇam saṁdadhyāt.²

(b) Suvarṇena rajatam (saṁdadhyāt).³

GEOMETRY

Understanding of Geometry by the exponents of the brāhmaṇas was well advanced. An eagle shaped altar having in its centre four triangles; two triangles on sides and one triangle at the tail end is mentioned. It has seven triangles, i. e., this altar is of seven human beings, the four triangles are the body of that human being and the three triangles are the sides and the tail end :

(a) Chaturaśra-śyenachiti.⁴

(b) Sa vai saptapurusho bhavati.....Chatvāro hi tasya purushasyātmā trayah pakshapuchchāni.⁵

The form of this altar is like an eagle. Example of such an altar has been excavated at Kauśāmbi, near Allahabad. A thorough knowledge of triangles is necessary to build them. Ordinary people avoided building this difficult multi-faced altar and preferred to have an altar of one triangle only. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, however, does not support this idea :

In Kāṭhaka Samhitā other forms of altars mentioned are of triangle, square, round and trough shapes :

(e) Pra-u-ga chitam chinvīta,³ i. e. to have a triangle shaped altar.

(f) Ubhayatah pra-u-gam chinvīta,⁴ i. e., to have a square shaped altar.

(g) Rathachakrachitam chinvīta,⁵ i. e., to have a round shaped altar.

(h) Droṇachitam chinvīta,⁶ i. e., to have a trough shaped altar.

Similarly, other forms of altars are mentioned in Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, Taittiriya Samhitā, Kāṭhaka Samhitā and other works. The details of geometrical formations were known to them and their knowledge of the subject was exhaustive.

THE HEAVEN

The few details mentioned in the preceding pages bring forth the varied and diverse subjects with which the exponents of the brāhmaṇas were intimately familiar. The treatment of each subject as available in the brāhmaṇas is exhaustive and their details are interspersed in the available brāhmaṇas related to the four Vedas. A thorough study of them brings forth the pertinent fact that the exhaustive Vedic literature must have had still more grasping details, helpful to analyse and put forth a simple, lucid and analytical treatment of the various aspects. The Vedas have mostly metaphysical and divine subjects revealed in them. The brāhmaṇas explicitly expound the trayi-vidyā or the three fold subject matter of the Vedas, dealing with the creation of the universe, the laws of nature and the fundamentals governing the human beings. A short survey of some of the relevant items of the three fold subject matter of the Vedas has been detailed here as explained in the brāhmaṇas, to grasp the diversity of their subject matter. The human life has the same cycle as the creation and destruction of the universe. This is endless and causes repeated births and deaths till the attainment of immortality. The attainment of heavenly abode is the cherished desire of human life and is achieved according to the actions of the past and present births and their results in a cumulative form of good and evil.

The abode always sought for as the cherished goal, is widely known as heaven, attainable through good actions, is well described by the exponents of the brāhmaṇas. The inevitable attainment of heaven as a result of good actions is mentioned in them. Besides, the good actions, performance of yajñas, practising of penance and offering of oblations definitely help the human being to get rid of the repeated cycles of birth and death and attain an abode in the heaven :

- (a) Ye hi janah puṇyakṛitah svargam lokam yanti.¹
- (b) Devā vai yajñena śrameṇa tapasāhutibhih svargam lokamāyan.²

What exactly was the conception of heaven before the exponents of the brāhmaṇas ? Was it located on the earth or in the middle regions or somewhere else ? The description now available, must have been easily understood by all in those early ages and has to be grasped, by the successors to the great knowledge of the Vedas, in the present age. Some of these descriptions may appear to be imaginary, but the knowledge at the back of all the exponents of the brāhmaṇas, will not permit the present day reader to laugh at such descriptions, but to certainly raise a desire in him to find out a comprehensible meaning in all such references, which are :

1 ये हि जनाः पुण्यकृतः स्वर्गं लोकं यन्ति, 6.5.4.8, ŚB
 2 देवा वै यज्ञेन श्रमेण तपसाहुतिभिः स्वर्गं लोकमायन्, 3.42, AB

THE BRĀHMANAS

(c) Sahasrāśvīne vā itah svargo lokāh.¹

(d) Chatuschatvārimsadāśvīnāni sarasvatyā vīnaśanāt phlakshah prāsravanastāvaditah svargo lokah sarasvatisammītenādhvanā svargam lokam yanti.²

According to the brāhmaṇas, the heaven is situated at a distance approachable by a horse, running very fast for one thousand days. The Tāmdya Brāhmaṇa prescribed the way to heaven as approached via Sarasvati and a horse could cover the distance in forty four days. The distance was sahasra and śata which are used in plural and mean more than one. The reference from the Kauśitaki Brāhmaṇa states that the sun shines at a distance of many yojanas. The authors of the Tāmdya-mahā-brāhmaṇa resided to the north of the Narmadā from where the Himalayas are at a distance of forty four days by a horse. It appears the heaven was considered to be located in the Himalayas, where many rulers named as Indra had ruled.

In brāhmaṇas, the sūrya loka is also called heaven. This sūrya loka is attained only after the death :

(e) Esha (ādityah) svargo lokah.¹

Results of the actions of a human being are reaped by him mostly in the existing birth itself. A human being is responsible personally for his good or bad life which is determined according to his own actions. To make oneself happy, it is desirable to act in a good manner and not to wish evil for others or act in an evil manner. It is possible to create for oneself a heavenly atmosphere even on this earth. The effort should be to achieve it and attain immortality through such actions. The brāhmaṇas offer complete and regulated path for human beings.

CHAPTER TWELVE

SOCIETY : ITS CLASSES

A fundamental of Aryan society was its division into four classes namely Brāhmaṇa, Kshatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra. The society was broadly divided into these four classes according to the profession of the people. These classes were determined not by birth, but a person according to his profession was placed in a particular class. The Aryan society has withstood the onslaughts of foreign invaders mainly due to this fundamental basis of its society. The highest amongst the society were the brāhmaṇas. It has been stated in the Vedic literature :

(a) Chatvāro vai varṇāḥ. Brāhmaṇo rājanyo vaiśyah śūdrah.¹

(b) Chatvāro vai purushā brāhmaṇo rājanyo vaiśyah śūdrah.²

BRĀHMANAS

The best amongst the society were the brāhmaṇas who were considered as Gods amongst men. A brāhmaṇa was so accepted due to his acquisition of knowledge, which lent to him the quality of agni and made him full of lustre of knowledge. It has been stated :

1 चत्वारो वै वर्णाः । ब्राह्मणो राजन्यो वैश्यः शूद्रः, 5.5.4.9, ŚB

2 चत्वारो वै पुरुषा ब्राह्मणो राजन्यो वैश्यः शूद्रः, 4.4.6, MS

THE BRĀHMANAS

(c) Atha haite manushyadevā ye brāhmaṇāḥ.¹

(d) Āgneyo vai brāhmaṇah.²

It was prescribed that all the rituals of a brāhmaṇa should be performed. A brāhmaṇa imbibed the energy of the sun due to his knowledge and therefore, all the ceremonies from his conception onwards, were required to be performed :

(e) Esha ha vai sântapano agniryad brāhmaṇo yasya garbhādhāna-puṁsavana-sîmantonnayana-jātakarma - nāmakarṇa - nishkramaṇa - annaprāśana-godāna-chūdākaraṇa - upanayana - āplāvana - agnihotra - vratacharyādīni kṛitāni bhavanti sa sântapanah.³

A brāhmaṇa was considered the best amongst human beings. A brāhmaṇa was Veda-personified, the four Vedas were the fundamentals of Aryan society. It is stated in Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa that brahma hi brāhmaṇah, i.e., Veda is manifest in a brāhmaṇa; whosoever preserved the Veda, had the highest reverence amongst the Aryans. For remembering, teaching and reciting the Vedas, a brāhmaṇa enjoys the highest esteem. It is laid down that he should never drink and should not act in a manner which would upset his knowledge. For a brāhmaṇa wine was a prohibited drink;

(f) Aśiva iva vā aesha bhaksho yatsurā brāhmaṇasya.⁴

A kshatriya and a vaiśya assume gentleness, truthfulness, while they are being ordained in the Vedic literature. They became brāhmaṇas during all such periods of life. It is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa :

(g) Sa (kshatriyah) ha dīkshamāṇa eva brāhmaṇatāmabhyupaiti.⁵

(h) Tasmādapi (dikshitam) Rājanyam vā vaiśyam vā brāhmaṇa ityeva brūyād brāhmaṇo hi jāyate yo yajñājjāyate.¹

A brāhmaṇa was considered to be born on account of the performance of yajñas ; he who performs a yajña became a brāhmaṇa himself.

(i) Ya u vai kaścha yajate brāhmaṇībhūyevaiva yajate.²

It was ordained for a brāhmaṇa not to indulge in music and dance. He, however, could recite the Vedas as a song :

(j) Brāhmaṇo naiva gāyenna nṛityet.³

A brāhmaṇa was expected to possess the same brilliance as the Veda itself :

(k) Tat hyeva brāhmaṇenaishṭavyam yad brahmavarchasi syāditi.⁴

The most intelligent amongst the brāhmaṇas were considered to be most powerful. His knowledge itself was a great strength in him. His weapons were his knowledge and politeness, as :

(l) Yo vai brāhmaṇānāmanuchānatamah sa eshām vīryavattamah.⁵

(m) Etāni vai brāhmaṇa āyudhāni yadyajñāyudhāni.⁶

A brāhmaṇa always expressed through his mouth, that is his main qualities were sufficient to defeat an enemy and his knowledge was the best weapon. He was always respected due to his qualities :

(n) Tasmād brāhmaṇo mukhena vīryamkaroti mukhato hi śṛiṣṭah.⁷

The existence of the nation depends only on its rulers who invariably were drawn from the kshatriyas and were considered as embodiment of strength and personified nation. Weak nations not having many warriors could not safeguard their country. Kshatriyas were owners of largest number of cattle. The various brāhmaṇas have all praise for them.

(a) Kshatram rājanyah.¹

(b) Kshtaram hi rāshṭram.²

(c) Tasmādu kshatriyo bhūyishṭham hi paśunāmīṣṭe.³

The relation between a brāhmaṇa and kshatriya was considered to be of dependence by a kshatriya on a brāhmaṇa. In a nation the strength of its army, if well guided by the knowledge of a brāhmaṇa, was of immense strength to the nation, and such a nation was considered of strong people. Also, in such nations strong people are always born. It is clearly mentioned that the kshatriyas for their guidance should be dependent on brāhmaṇas, as :

(d) Tadyatra brāhmaṇah kshatram vaśameti tadrāshṭram smṛiddham tadviravadāhāsmīn viro jāyate.⁴

Even in the Veda, it is mentioned that the strength of the army and wisdom should work together for the benefit of the people. The adverse criticism of the brāhmaṇas as ruling over kshatriyas is incorrect. The guidance of brāhmaṇas having vast knowledge was helpful to guide the destiny of the nation. Even today, the same principle is observed by all the nations. If the armed strength of the nation is well guided by the rulers, defeat is always a remote possibility. If a king is not guided by wise and intelligent ministers, the number of his enemies increases and he is always in danger, as mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa :

It is also mentioned in the same brāhmaṇa that a brāhmaṇa should not be without a kshatriya and a kshatriya should not be without a brāhmaṇa. They should both be dependent on each other. Success is definite for a ruler, who consults a brāhmaṇa in his projects and his nation attains prosperity through the guidance of a brāhmaṇa. It is also stated that if a brāhmaṇa possesses real knowledge, is gentle, polite and without duplicity, he does not need protection of kshatriyas as he has no enemies, and even if another person has enmity with him it would be possible for him to defeat or win over such a person merely using polite language. On the other hand, a kshatriya is more dependent on a brāhmaṇa. It is mentioned :

(f) Tattadavakṛiptameva. Yad brāhmaṇo arājanyah syādyadyu, rājānam labheta samṛiddham tadetaddha tvevānavakṛiptam. Yatkshatriyo abrāhmaṇo bhavati yaddha kiṃ cha karma kurute aprasūtam brahmaṇā mitreṇa na haivāsmāi tatsmṛidhyate tasmādu kshatriyeṇa karma karishyamāṇenopasartavya eva brāhmaṇah sam haivāsmāi tadbrahmaprasūtam karma ardhhyate.²

A glaring example of a kshatriya ruler having attained immense strength through the continued guidance of his minister, Kautalya, who was a brāhmaṇa, is of Chandragupta. The references in the brāhmaṇas are well illustrated by this example.

The weapons of a kshatriya are horses, chariots, bows, arrows and his real strength lies in fighting very often :

(g) Etāni kshatrasyāyudhāni yadaśvarathah kavacha ishudhanva.³

(h) Yuddham vai rājanyasya vīrym.¹

The quality of a ruler primarily is to be of great strength. His thighs should be strong enough to protect the nation. A nation disturbed by bad administration is never able to defeat any other country. A nation whose people quarrel amongst themselves and where the rule of law is absent, such a nation is always defeated by another nation.

(i) Tasmādrājā bāhubalī bhāvukah.²

(j) Tasmādrājorubalī bhāvukah.³

An interesting reference from Kauśika Sūtra is regarding the movement of an army for a war when its important part should occupy the front lines, with the king guiding it :

(l) Tadyatha mahārājah purastātsainānikāni pratyuhyābhayam panthānamanviyāt.⁵

VAIŚYAS

Vaiśyas are sparingly mentioned. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, it is stated that the vaiśyas form the nation. This is perhaps true as the nation always needs finances and the earnings of a vaiśya could be helpful to run the administration :

Rāshṭrāṇi vai viśah.⁶

ŚŪDRAS

In literature, śūdras were never praised; but this should not mean that the upper classes were against them. The basic factor is that the determination of the classes of the society never depended on the birth, but on profession only. An important factor to classify was to consider a person as śūdra who would not learn, write and read in spite of the best efforts. He, who never desired to prosper and rise in life, was naturally condemned as a śūdra. Such people have their living only by means of serving and being dependent on others. Such persons were considered to have been born of the feet of others and by washing their feet could live in this world. It is mentioned :

(m) Tasmātpādāvaneyjannāti varddhate patto hi sṛṣṭah.¹

The brāhmaṇas state that a person without knowledge has to lead his life by putting in labour only and therefore, a śūdra devoid of knowledge is labour personified :

(n) Tapo vai śūdrah.²

(o) Asuryya h śūdrah.³

It was no use making efforts for such a person to understand the Veda ; even though possessing the senses, he was more or less a burden on the earth and to have come straight from the cremation ground. Studies were never permitted in a cremation ground. On the same principle, it was never desirable to study before a śūdra. A śūdra was a person who had belied efforts to understand and grasp knowledge and therefore, it was considered useless to sermon such a person on the Veda :

(p) Padyu ha vā etachchhmaśānam yachchhūdrastasmāchhūdrasamīpe nādhyetavyama.⁴

The undelying principles enunciated by the brāhmaṇas were distorted in the mediaeval periods and a śūdra was punished for even passing by the side of a person reading the Veda. Throughout the early Vedic literature such an idea is nowhere mentioned. It is a mere distotion by the later writers. A śūdra being devoid of knowledge never had the right to perform yajñas and it is stated :

(q) Tasmāchchūdro yajñe anavakṛiptah.¹

It has already been emphasised that the determination of the class of a person depended on his qualifications. It was merit that had always determined it. The tradition, however, developed that a brāhmaṇa always made efforts for his son to become a brāhmaṇa and a kshatriya made his son an expert in the war-fare. This was considered convenient and expedient and therefore, successive dynasties of brāhmaṇas had produced brāhmaṇas only. It was possible for a non brāhmaṇa to become brāhmaṇa by acquiring exceptional knowledge by putting in special efforts. Similarly, a brāhmaṇa without knowledge was discarded as a brāhmaṇa.

A non-brāhmaṇa had once attained the position of a great rishi to whom even the hymns of aponaptra devatā were later revealed. He was Kavasha Ailusha, son of a śūdra lady. He had been ordained to the knowledge of the Vedas and was taking part in a yajña alongwith other rishis. When a rishi came to know of the fact, he was not allowed to participate. He retired to the forest extremely thirsty and a sūkta was revealed to him. Rishis, who earlier had disassociated him, now, specially invited him to participate in their yajña. It is mentioned :

Rishayo vai Sarasvatyām sattamāsata te Kavashamailūsham somādana-

bahirdhanvodūḍhaha pipāsayā vitta etadaponaptrīyamapaśyat, pra devatrā

Brāhmaṇas and kshatriyas, normally, never had any pride as it was considered to be the sole cause of their down fall.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

THE ĀRAṆYAKAS

Āraṇyakas are the concluding portion of the brāhmaṇas, just as Upanishads are the concluding portion of the āraṇyakas. The very name itself suggests that these narrate the intricacies of yajñas discussed while residing in the aranya or forest. These were propounded by the rishis who resided in the forests and dilated upon the secrets of the yajñas as described in the āraṇyakas. Sāyaṇa has the definition āraṇyavratarūpam brāhmaṇam. He, in his introduction to his commentary on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa writes¹ :

Aitareyabrāhmaṇe asti kāṇḍamāraṇyakābhidham,
Aranya eva pāthyatvādāraṇyakamitīryate. 5.
Satraprakarṇe anuktiraraṇyādhyayanāya hi, mahāvratasya tasyātra hautram karma vivichyate. 8.

i. e., the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa has a separate kāṇḍa of its āraṇyaka. Its name was due to its being taught in the forests. This has been explained in these chapters which were only studied in the forests. The hautra karma of the mahāvra is only discussed here.

1 ऐतरेयब्राह्मणेऽस्ति काण्डमारण्यकाभिधम् । अरण्य एव पाठ्यत्वादारण्यकमितीर्यते ॥5॥
सत्रप्रकरणेऽनुक्तिररण्याध्ययनाय हि । महाव्रतस्य तस्यात्र होत्रं कर्म विविच्यते ॥8॥

Sureśvara writes that being studied in the forests, these were titled as āraṇyakas :

Āraṇyādhyayanāch chaitadāraṇyakamiti.¹

It is mentioned in the Śānti Parva of the Mahābhārata :

Navanītam yathā dadhno malayāchchandanam yathā;
Āraṇyakam cha vedebhya oshadhibhyo amṛtam yathā.²

Like the number of brāhmaṇas related to saṃhitās, the number of āraṇyakas was also once very large. These have almost all been lost. Very few are available. The yajñas and mahāvratas required to be performed by the old people, who had renounced their family life, were all detailed in these works. The meanings of the yajñas is explained in these works. The actions of life and acquisition of knowledge are both co-related in these works. These works form the basis of the rahasya or secrets discussed in the Upanishads; therefore, another name of the āraṇyakas was rahasya, as well. This name is mentioned in the *Gopatha Brāhmaṇa*³ and Manu Smṛiti.⁴ Maskarī explains the same meaning of this word.⁵ According to Vāsishṭha Dharma Sūtra, the penance for a wayward lady is mentioned in these works :

(d) Tasyā bhaturabhichāra uktam prāyaścittam rahasyeshu.⁶

At times, references from āraṇyakas were quoted as from brāhmaṇas as these formed their part. The Bṛihad Āraṇyaka is evidently a part of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. Similarly, Jaiminiya Āraṇyaka is a portion of Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa.

Most of the available Upanishads are a part of the āraṇyakas, like; Aitareyopanishad is a part of the Aitareya-āraṇyaka, Kaushitaki Upanishad is a part of the Sāṃkhāyana-āraṇyaka and Taittirīyopanishad is a part of the Taittirīyāraṇyaka, etc.

1 *Aitareya Āraṇyaka*¹

Aitareya Āraṇyaka has only five āraṇyakas. The first āraṇyaka has five, the second seven, the third two, the fourth one and the fifth three chapters, i. e., in all eighteen chapters. Each chapter is further divided into khaṇḍas.

The first āraṇyaka discusses the mahāvratas or fundamental duties and vows and the sāmāna-stotras to be sung on a particular day. In the Aitareya-Brahmaṇa, gavāmayana or ceremony of the day is mentioned. It includes mahāvratas, as well. The mantras to be recited in the morning, the afternoon and the evening related to them are mentioned in this āraṇyaka. The language and style of the āraṇyaka is similar to that of the brāhmaṇa.

The second āraṇyaka has two divisions. Chapters 1-3 explain the meaning of uktha. i.e., the verses to be recited from the sub-division and chapters 4-6 are the Upanishad portion.

The third āraṇyaka refers to the divisions of the saṃhitā, as :

Athāto nirbhujappravādāh. Prithivyāyatanam nirbhujam divyāyatanam pratīṇṇamantarikshāyatanamubhayamantareṇa.²

The pronunciations of the undivided saṃhitā are described. The abode of the original saṃhitā is on the earth. The Pada-pāṭha or the arrangement of each word separately in its original form is related to the heavenly regions. The middle regions are related to krama-pāṭha i. e., arrangement of words both as connected and unconnected with the following and the preceding words. In the third āraṇyaka, divisions of vowels and other consonants are narrated. This āraṇyaka mentions a large number of ṛishis.

The fourth āraṇyaka has a collection of mahānāmni ṛichās. These ṛichās are available in the Naigeya recension of the Sāma-veda, as well.

The fifth āraṇyaka is mainly devoted to the nishkaivalya śāstra. This is recited during the afternoon ceremony of the mahāvratā. The language of the particular āraṇyaka is similar to that of sūtras.

Mahidāsa Aitareya, who had compiled and expounded the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, had also expounded first three āraṇyakas of the Aitareya Āraṇyaka. The fourth āraṇyaka was expounded by Āśvalāyana. In his introduction to the Sāmaveda, Sāyaṇa writes that the fourth āraṇyaka was compiled by Āśvalāyana. Similarly, Shadguru-śishya in his introduction to Rik-Sarvānukramaṇi-vṛitti writes :

Śaunakīyam cha daśakam tachchhiśyasya trikam tathā.
Dvādaśādhyāyakam sūtram chatushkagṛihyameva cha.
Chatuṥthāraṇyakam cheti hyāśvalāyanasūtrakam.¹

i. e., Śaunaka had written ten works related to the Rig-veda and his disciple Āśvalāyana had written three works which are Śrauta Sūtra of 12 chapters, Gṛihya Sūtra of 4 chapters and the third is a āraṇyaka. He makes a similar reference in his commentary, as well.

The fifth āraṇyaka was compiled by Śaunaka. In his commentary on the Aitareya Āraṇyaka, Sāyaṇa writes :

Ata eva panchame Śaunakenodāhṛitā.
Tāscha pañchame Śaunakena śākhāntaramāśritya paṭhitāh.²

i. e., Śaunaka refers in the fifth āraṇyaka. It appears that according to Sāyaṇa, the fifth āraṇyaka was compiled by Śaunaka. Keith in his introduction to the Aitareya Āraṇyaka, writes, "As might be expected,

1 शौनकीयं च दशकं तच्छिष्यस्य त्रिकं तथा । they (the verbal coincidences between the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and the Āraṇyaka) are constant and show unmistakably the connection of the two wroks." Again he writes on page 1 of his introduction, "but it (the use of additional Mss.) establishes the fact that the tradition as to the text seems unbroken."

2 Kaushītaki Āraṇyaka

Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa is separately available. Similarly, Kaushītaki Āraṇyaka was also once available.¹

3 *Śāṃkhāyana Āraṇyaka*²

Śāṃkhāyana Āraṇyaka has fifteen chapters. The first chapter has 8, second 18, third 7, fourth 15, fifth 8, sixth 20, seventh 23, eighth 11, ninth to twelfth 8 each, thirteenth 1, fourteenth 2 and fifteenth 1 khaṇḍas i. e., in all 137 khaṇḍas.

In almost all respects, Śāṃkhāyana Āraṇyaka is much similar to the Aitareya Āraṇyaka. The method and forms of the mahāvratas narrated in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka, have also been narrated in this Āraṇyaka. Its first two chapters in some of the manuscripts are a portion of the brāhmaṇa of this name. Uśīnara, Matsya, Kurūpāñchāla Kāśīvideha and other countries are mentioned in it. Kaushītaki Upaniṣhad begins with this third chapter and the sixth chapter has only four chapters of this Upaniṣhad.

The genealogy mentioned at the end of this āraṇyaka reads :
Guṇākhyachchāṃkhāyanādasmābhirdhītam,³ i. e., this knowledge is

ĀRANYAKAS of YAJURVEDA

1 Bṛihadāraṇyaka (Mādhyandina)¹

Bṛihadāraṇyaka has six chapters. The first has 6, second 5, third 9, fourth 5, fifth 15, and the sixth chapter has 4 brāhmaṇas ; in all it has 44 sub-brāhmaṇas. These sub-brāhmaṇas have further been divided into khaṇḍas and kaṇḍikās. The fifth and sixth chapters have been referred to as interpolated by some authors. Besides, the six chapters, this āraṇyaka had two more chapters treated once as a portion of this āraṇyaka. These chapters mention the performance of yajñas. Śaṁkara and other authors have not commented on these chapters as these deal with the performance of yajñas only. These two chapters were separated from the āraṇyaka which has, therefore, at present, only six chapters.

This āraṇyaka is a portion of Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa of Mādhyandina recension. It begins with 10.6.4 of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. The portion of the brāhmaṇa following it is not a portion of the āraṇyaka but has to be carefully sifted.

Except for a few variants in its readings, this āraṇyaka is almost similar to the āraṇyaka of the Kāṇva recension. The special features, of the Bṛihad-āraṇyaka of the Kāṇva recension, apply to this āraṇyaka, as well. This āraṇyaka was compiled alongwith the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa of the Mādhyandina recension.

Bṛihad Āraṇyaka is composed of six brāhmaṇas or chapters. The first and second chapters have 6 each, the third has 9, fourth has 6, the

Its chapters are similar to the chapters of the āraṇyaka of the Mādhyandina recension. This āraṇyaka is also named as a Upanishad. Yājñavalkya is the main character of this āraṇyaka, with whom king Janaka of Videha joins in the religious discourses. A saṁnyāsi is referred to in this āraṇyaka, as; i. e., on understanding the soul, it is possible for a person to become a muni, Desiring to attain immortality in the loka of brahma, persons become saṁnyāsi. The earlier sages had similar views and did not have the desire for off-spring. When the goal is to understand the soul and attain that loka of brahma, they never had the desire for progeny. Discarding the desire for a son, riches and worldly prosperity, these persons depend only on alms.

(a) Etameva viditvā munirbhavati. Etameva pravrajino lokamichchhantah pravrajanti etaddha sma vai tatpūrve vidvānsah prajāma na kāmāyante kim prajāyā karishyāmo yeshām no ayamātmā ayam loka iti te ha sma putraishaṇyāścha vittaishaṇyāścha lokaishaṇyāścha vyutthāyātha bhikshācharyam charanti.¹

This upanishad is widely popular and the exalted image of great religious ladies like Gārgī and Maitreyī is narrated in it. Their religious discourses explain the creation of the universe, the omnipotence of the Almighty, the soul and the cycle of birth and death, in a simple and lucid manner. No nation, no country, no culture and none in this age of science has been able to produce such great lovers of truth who had complete knowledge of the self, the soul and the Almighty as are mentioned in this āraṇyaka. They had brought great glory to India and the nation of Āryas.

learnt from Guṇākhyā Śāṁkhāyana. It appears that the phrase asmābhi used here refers to many disciples of Guṇākhyā Śāṁkhāyana. These disciples had composed this āraṇyaka, having learnt it from their teacher. It could also mean that the first chapters were propounded by Śāṁkhāyana and the last chapter added by his disciples.

It is evident from a study of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa that this āraṇyaka was compiled alongwith the brāhmaṇa. The āraṇyaka forms a part of the brāhmaṇa, definitely.

3 Taittirīya Āraṇyaka¹

Taittirīya Āraṇyaka has ten prapāṭhakas. The first 2 prapāṭhakas are known as kāṭhaka.² In the commentary by Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara, the total prāśnas in the prapāṭhakas are also mentioned. The tenth prapāṭhaka is distorted. Sāyaṇa was, therefore, prompted to consider this prapāṭhaka as an interpolation and writes in the beginning of his commentary :

Yathā bṛihadāraṇyake saptamāśṭamādhyāyau khilakāṇḍatvenāchāryair-udāhṛitau, tatheyam nārāyaṇīyā vyākhyā yājñikyupanishadapi khilakāṇḍarūpāllakṣaṇopetātvaḥ.³

i. e., the seventh⁴ and the eighth chapters in the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka are accepted as interpolations by the authors; this Yājñika Upanishad explaining Nārāyaṇa in Nārāyaṇa Upanishad is also an interpolation, on account of its similar qualities.

The first prapāṭhaka has 32, the second 20, the third 21, the fourth 42, the fifth to seven 12 each, the eighth 9 and the ninth has 10 anuvākas; their total number is 170.

According to Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara, the tenth prapāṭhaka has 64 anuvākas. The tenth prapāṭhaka is not only an interpolation, but the number of its anuvākas is also not correctly known. Sāyaṇa in his commentary on this prapāṭhaka writes :

Tatra draviḍānām chatuḥshashṭha-anuvākapāṭhah; Āndhrānāmaśītyanuvāhapāṭhah. Kārṇāṭakeṣhu keshānchichchatuḥ saptatipāṭhah. Apareshām navāśi-

i. e., in the Nārāyaṇa Upanishad or the tenth prapāṭhaka of Taittiriya Āraṇyaka, the manuscripts from Drāviḍa have 64, anuvākas, the Āndhra manuscripts have 80 anuvākas and some of the manuscripts from Karṇāṭaka have 74 anuvākas and others have 89 anuvākas. Under the circumstances, on a close comparative study of the different readings, he explains mainly the 80 anuvākas available in the manuscripts from Āndhra.

Śaṅkara in his Vedānta Sūtra refers to 80 anuvākas.³ The variant readings are possibly due to sub-recensions. The commentary of Kūra Nārāyaṇa Muni on Taittiriya Āraṇyaka needs closer study for this tenth prapāṭhaka. The interpolations by the later authors have completely distorted this portion. Sāyaṇa has mentioned only the variant readings and it has not been possible for him to sift the original material.

The Taittiriya Upanishad has a portion of this āraṇyaka and begins with the seventh prapāṭhaka and ends with the ninth prapāṭhaka. Many important derivations are mentioned in this āraṇyaka, as :

Kaśyapah paśyako bhavati. Yatsarvam paripaśyatīti saukshmyāt.³

i. e., Kaśyapa, which becomes paśyaka, refers to one who perceives the great Almighty ; and is able to see him even in his very minute form. Vyāsa and Vaiśampāyana are mentioned in this āraṇyaka, as :

Sa hovācha vyāsaḥ pārāśaryah Iti Vaiśampāyanah.⁵

1 This reading is from the edition by Rajendra Lal Mitra, which has Sāyaṇa's Commentary on 64 anuvākas only ; this reading is available in the edition from Anandasrama

The famous Subrahmanya-ṛichā is mentioned in this āraṇyaka.¹ A description of hell is also mentioned in it.² Four types of waters are mentioned in it :

Chatvāri vā apām rūpāṇi. Megho vidyut. Stanayitnurvṛishṭih.³
i. e., these are cloud, lightening, thunder and rain.

Six other types of waters mentioned in it are rain water, well water, lake water, waters flowing from rivers etc. water from a pitcher and spring water :

Varshyāh, kūpyāh, sthāvarāh, vahantih, sambhāryāh and palvalyāh.

Another hymn refers to a unique type of chariot having 1000 spokes, many wheels and fitted with 1000 horses. Does this refer to the chariot of Sun ; if not, it must have been a strange chariot, as :

Ratham-sahasrabandhram. Puruśchakram sahasrāśvam.⁴

The sacred thread or yajñopavita is found mentioned for the first time in this āraṇyaka. It is stated that a yajña performed by a person wearing the sacred thread was well recognised and a brāhmaṇa reciting the Vedas while wearing the sacred thread performs actually a yajña :

Prasṛito ha vai yajñopavitino yajñah.....Yat kiṃ cha brāhmaṇo yajñopavitādhite yajata eva tat.⁵

Bauddha bhikshus were designated as śramaṇas in this āraṇyaka ; the same word refers to a person who performs penance.⁶

Taittiriya Āraṇyaka is the most useful āraṇyaka as it explains many hymns.

Maitrāyaṇīya Āraṇyaka or Bṛihad Āraṇyaka of Charaka Recension

*Maitrāyaṇīya Āraṇyaka*¹ has seven prapāṭhakas consisting of 4 of the first, 7 of the second, 5 of the third, 6 of the fourth, 2 of the fifth, 38 of the sixth and 11 khaṇḍas of the seventh prapāṭhaka. The total khaṇḍas are 73. This āraṇyaka is more famous as Maitreyī Upanishad. The number of its prapāṭhakas differ in the printed editions. The edition published from Ānandāśrama has seven, the edition from Nirṇaya Sāgara has five, the edition by Schroeder has three and the edition called Sāmānya Vedānta Upanishad has four prapāṭhakas. All these editions begin with the second khaṇḍa of the first prapāṭhaka of the edition printed from Ānandāśrama. The edition by Schroeder differs from the other three editions. The arrangement of khaṇḍas differs in each. In one of the manuscripts, it is written at the end :

Iti saptama prapāṭhaka iti charkashākhovata bṛihadāraṇya upanishata susamāpta. Śubham bhavatu.....Sake 1687 māhe phālguṇa.....²

This reading is mostly corrupt. The readings in original manuscripts do not seem to have been so incorrect. This manuscript was obtained from the house of a brāhmaṇa belonging to the Maitrāyaṇī recension. It could be concluded that Maitreyī Upanishad of the Charaka recension having seven prapāṭhakas is the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka. Maitreyī is a sub division of the Charakas. Kaṭha-saṃhitā belongs to the Charaka recension. Maitrāyaṇī Āraṇyaka of the Charaka recension is called Bṛihad Āraṇyaka. Maitreyī Upanishad is a portion of this āraṇyaka. Its proper sequence, due to the distorted condition of the manuscript, could not be arranged, so far.

ĀRAṆYAKA of SĀMAVEDA

Talavakāra Āraṇyaka or Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa

Talavakāra Āraṇyaka has four chapters, which are further subdivided into anuvākas and khaṇḍas, as follows :

Anuvāka	Prathamādhyāya	Dvītyādhyāya	Trītyādhyāya	Chaturthādhyāya
1 anuvāka	7 khaṇḍas	2 khaṇḍas	5 khaṇḍas	1 khaṇḍas
2 „	3 „	4 „	5 „	1 „
3 „	4 „	3 „	4 „	1 „
4 „	4 „	3 „	5 „	1 „
5 „	1 „	3 „	9 „	1 „
6 „	3 „		9 „	3 „
7 „	2 „		5 „	2 „

12 „	5 „			2 „
13 „	2 „
14 „	4 „
15 „	4 „
16 „	3 „
17 „	3 „
18 „	5 „
Total khaṇḍas	60 „	15 „	42 „	28 „ = 145

Earlier on page 38, its khaṇḍa division has been discussed according to which the Upanishad Brāhmaṇa had 154 khaṇḍas. The interchange of figures 4 and 5 caused the incorrect totalling of 154 instead of 145.

THE ĀRANYAKAS

The language of this āraṇyaka is similar to that of the brāhmaṇa. The famous Kena Upanishad begins with the tenth anuvāka of the fourth chapter and is completed in four khaṇḍas of the same anuvāka. The best explanation of many hymns is available in this āraṇyaka. Many hymns of the Sāma-veda are mentioned in it along with the names of āchāryas. It is certain that the āraṇyaka portion was propounded by Jaimini and Talavakāra, like its brāhmaṇa portion.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

COMPILATION OF ĀRAṆYAKAS

The major portion of the āraṇyakas form part of the brāhmaṇas of similar names. These had been propounded by the same ṛishis who had expounded the brāhmaṇas. The fourth and the fifth āraṇyakas of the Aitareya Āraṇyaka were composed by Āśvalāyana and Śaunaka. The brāhmaṇas had been compiled during the Mahābhārata period ; the āraṇyakas had also been compiled, simultaneously. The date of Śaunaka and other ṛishis is, therefore, of the same period or a little later. Regarding the date of Śaunaka, the view expressed by the western scholars, assigning to him a date from the third century before Christ to the seventh century before Christ is not tenable. Śaunaka and other āchāryas have to be assigned a period within two or three generations of the Mahābhārata war. Most of these āchāryas especially Śaunaka, Āśvalāyana, Katyāyana, Yāska, Pāṇini, Piṅgala, Vyāḍi and Kautsa were all contemporaries. It was the age, the golden period of vedic literature, handed over to posterity as the cumulative achievement in comprehension of the vast knowledge, revealed originally at the time of the creation of the universe by our great predecessors.

Shadguru-śishya in his introduction to his Rik-sarvānukramaṇi Vṛitti writes about Śaunaka :¹

Śaunakiyā daśagranthastadā ṛigvedaguptaye,
Ārśyanukramaṇītyādyā chhāndasī daivatī tathā.
Anuvākānukramaṇi sūktānukramaṇi tathā,
Ṛikpādayorvidhāne cha vārhdāivatameva cha.
Prātiśākhyaṃ Śaunakiyaṃ smārte daśamamuchyate.²

i. e., Śaunaka had compiled ten works to protect the Rig-veda as : Ārshānukramaṇi, Chhandonukramaṇi, Devatānukramaṇi, Anuvākānukramaṇi, Sūktānukramaṇi, Rig-vidhāna, Pāda-vidhāna Bṛihaddevatā, Prātiśākhya and Śaunaka-smṛiti.

Macdonell who had edited Bṛihad-devatā expresses his doubt about its authorship by Śaunaka and writes, “my conclusion, therefore, is that the writer was not Śaunaka, but a teacher of his school, who was not separated, from him by any great length of time.”³ It is to be asserted, contrarily, that Śaunaka was the author of Bṛihad-devatā which was enlarged by a disciple who had succeeded him soon after. In this work, Yāska and his views are quoted in more than twenty places. Yāska on the other hand in his Anukramaṇi on the Taittirīya recension of Yajur-veda refers to Śaunaka, as :

Yajurvedasarvānukramanyām—dvādaśinah trayoashṭāksharāścha jagatī jyotiśmatī. Sāpi tṛiṣṭubh itī Śaunakah itī vachanāt.⁴

Similarly, the view point of Yāska expressed in Nirukta is discussed in Bṛihad-devatā, as :

Pādamekam samādāya dvidhā kṛtvā niruktavān,

Pūrushādah padam yāsko vṛikshe vṛiksha iti tvṛichi.¹

i. e., the phrase pūrushādah in Rig-veda 10.27.22 is split into two by Yāska in Nirukta 2.6, wherein, he explains it as purūshānadanāya. In the following verses of Bṛihad-devatā references from the Nirukta are borrowed.

Śaunaka refers to Yāska in his Prātiśākhya and states that according to him there is no ṛichā having quarter stanza in all the ten maṇḍalas of Rig-veda, as : na dāśatayyekapadā kāchidastīti vai Yāskah.²

Yādava Prakāśa in his commentary on Pīṅgala's Chhandovichi writes on sūtra 3.7 and refers to the Prātiśākhya of Śaunaka, as : Pādaj-ātiyakatvādevaikapadānāmadyāsavaśād "dāśatayā ekapadā (nāsti) iti Yāska āchāryyah" Yādā adhyāsaḥ :

Ityekam padam vinā sa tu pṛithageveti Yāsko manyate.³

It is definite that either Yāska had preceded Śaunaka or they were well known to each other as contemporaries.

Āśvalāyana

Āśvalāyana was a disciple of Śaunaka as stated by Shadguru-śishya ; Śaunakasya tu śishyo abhudbhagavānāśvlāyanah.¹

Āśvalāyana has been quoted in Bṛihad-devatā which was compiled by Śaunaka and his disciple. A śrauta-sūtra by Āśvalāyana is quoted in Nirukta. Śaunaka and Yāska are contemporaries and it is certain that Āśvalāyana was also their contemporary.

Kātyāyana

Kātyāyana was a disciple of Śaunaka² as again stated by Shadguru-śishya in his Rik-sarvānukramaṇi Vṛitti :

Nanu cha eko hi Śaunakāchāryaśishyo bhagavān Kātyāyanah. Katham bahuvachanam.³

The phrase anukramishyāmah in plural has to be explained ; as Katyāyana was the only disciple of Śaunaka. He is the same Kātyāyana who had written Kātyāyana Śrauta-sūtra, Upa-grantha-sūtra, Vārtika-pāṭha and many other works. The following reference⁴ to him is interpreted by Max Muller, as, "the ślokas of the smṛiti." He further writes in a note, "bhrājamāna, is unintelligible, it may be pārshad. Max Muller is unable to understand the phrase bhrājamāna and states it to be pārshad. The verse is simple and has to be interpreted, instead, as 'Kātyāyana was the author of the smṛiti as well as all the verses called bhrāja.' Katyāyana was the author of the verses called bhrāja as stated in the Paspasāhnikā of Mahābhāshya.

It is evident that Śaunaka, Āśvalāyana, Kātyāyana, Yāska and Pāṇini were all contemporaries.

Yāska

Yāska, the author of Nirukta has quoted a sūtra each from Pāṇini and Śaunaka, as : parah sannikarshah saṁhitā. Padprakṛtiḥ saṁhitā.¹

A sūtra quoted in the Nirukta is from a Prātiśākhya. Puṇyarāja in his commentary of Vākya-Padīya of Bhartṛhari refers to it as :

Iha cha padaprakṛtiḥ saṁhitā iti prātiśākhyaṁ and tatkatham padaprakṛtiḥ saṁhitā iti prātiśākhyaṁ.²

This sūtra in the Prātiśākhya by Śaunaka reads saṁhitā pada-prakṛtiḥ.³ It is apparent that the sūtra from Śaunaka, available in the Rik Prātiśākhya, is quoted by Yāska by inter-changing the two words of it.⁴ The reason being Yāska having earlier quoted a sūtra from Pāṇini's Aṣṭādhyāyī as parah sannikarshah saṁhitā.⁵ Here, the nominative is in the end and follows the same grammatical principle. Yāska has reconstructed the phrase from Śaunaka, accordingly. It is evident that Yāska is quoting from the aphorisms of Pāṇini and Śaunaka.

A kalpa by Yāska is referred to in Hāratalā.⁶

Yāska, the author of Nighaṇṭu and Nirukta had written more works. He had definitely written a work on metrical science. Uvaṭa, in his commentary on the first sūtra of Rik Prātiśākhya, writes :

Tathā sarvaiśchhandovichityādibhiḥ Pīṅgala-Yāska-Saitava-prabhṛtibhiryatsāmānyenoktam lakṣaṇam.⁷

1 परः सन्निकर्षः संहिता । पदप्रकृतिः संहिता, 1.17

It is evident that Yāska and Saitava wrote on metrical science like the work of Piṁgala, known as Chhando Vichiti, which at present is available. Piṁgala writes, Uro brīhati Yāskasya.¹ Yāska had accepted Nyamkusārīṇi as Uro Brīhati. Yāska's work on metrical science was available to Piṁgala.

Pāṇini

Yāska quotes an aphorism from Pāṇini ; as earilier stated not only Pāṇini but his younger brother Piṁgala was also a contemporary of all the above authors.³

Piṁgala

Piṁgala or Piṁgala Nāga was the younger brother of Pāṇini. Shadguru-śishya refers to Piṁgala in his Vedārtha Dipikā, as :

Tathā cha sutryate hi bhagavatā Piṁgalena Pāṇinyanujena kvachinnava-kāśchatvārah. [Piṁgala Chhando-Vichiti, 3 33] Iti paribhāshā.³

i. e., the aphorism, kvachita...was by Piṁgala, the younger brother of Pāṇini. This aphorism is referred to in Chhando Vichiti by Piṁgala.⁴ According to the tradition known to Shadguru-śishya, Piṁgala-Nāga, the author of the sūtra on metrical science was the younger brother of Pāṇini. Max Muller and Weber had accepted this view. Was Piṁgala Nāga, the younger brother of the same Pāṇini, who was the author of Ashṭādhyāyī? It is evident, that the elder brother of Piṁgala was the same Pāṇini, even if there were many persons of the same name, and was the author of Ashṭādhyāyī.

The following verse, the second of Paṇiniya-śikshā, related to the Rigveda, settles the point stating that after commenting on the aphorism of Piṁgala, the Śikshā which follows closely Pāṇini, is being commented upon :

Śikshām tadyām vyākhyāsyē Pāṇinīyānusārīṇi.¹

At present two commentaries, one by Halāyuhda and the other by Yādava Prakāśa, are available on the aphorisms on metrical science by Pīṅgala. The author of this Śikshā accepts it as following Pāṇini and not written by Pāṇini himself. The statement that its author was Pīṅgala needs no further scrutiny.

The other Śiksha by Pāṇini is related to Yajur-veda and has only thirty eight verses. A manuscript of it in the India Office Library has only twenty complete and one incomplete verses.²

It has to be accepted that aphorisms of Pāṇiniya Śikshā were expressed in verse form by Pīṅgala. All the references help us to state that Pīṅgala had definite relations with Pāṇini, who was the author of Aṣṭādhyāyī. It had additions and is now available in sixty verses. The author of Śikshā Prakāśa has preserved the tradition. It is further corroborated by Dharaṇī Dhara, a disciple of Mahādeva, who writes in his Pañchikā on the Śikshā of Yajur-veda, as :

Pāṇinīyamatānusārīṇī Śrīpīṅgalāchāryavirachitā Pāṇinīyaśikshā samāptā.³

The author of Śikshā Prakāśa further corroborates the historical facts stated by Shaḍguru-śishya, as :

Jeshṭhabhrāṭribhīrvihito (Jyeshṭha ?) vyākaraṇe anujanustatra bhagavān
Pīṅgalāchāryastanmatamanubhāvya śikshām vaktum pratijānīte.⁴

i. e., Pīṅgala was younger brother of the great grammarian Pāṇini.

Besides the internal evidence, the external evidence also corroborates that Pīṅgala had followed Pāṇini. Kielhorn writes about

1 व्याख्याय पिङ्गला चार्यसूत्राण्यादौ यथायथम् । शिक्षां तदीयां व्याख्यास्ये पाणिनीयानुसारिणीम् ॥

Bhartrihari, author of Tripadi on Mahā-bhāshya, as, “in his commentary on the Mahā-bhāshya, he (Bhartrihari) cites.....a verse of the Pāṇinīya Śikshā in particular.”¹ Piṅgala was well familiar to Patañjali who refers to him as : Piṅgalakāṇvasyachchhātrāḥ paṅgalakāṇvāḥ.²

Pāṇini refers to his younger brother in his Gaṇa Pāṭha when he mentions Piṅgala³ and Chhando Vichiti.⁴ Even if there were a number of works called Chhando Vichiti, Pāṇini refers to such a work only by his younger brother. Both Pāṇini and Patañjali had known more than one work on metrical science ; the latter writes :

So asau chhandahśāstreshvabhivinīta upalabdhyaṅvaganmutsahate.⁵

In the Gaṇa Pāṭha of Pāṇini another work, Chhando Vijñi, is mentioned. This reading is an interpolation by later authors.

Pāṇini in his Gaṇapāṭha mentions Chhando-māna, Chhando-Bhāshā, and Chhando-Vichiti.⁶ In the second kaṇḍikā of Charaṇa-vyūha by Śaunaka, Chhando Bhāshā is also mentioned. Its explanation by Mahidāsa is incorrect.

In the List of Sanskrit Manuscripts,⁷ Oxford, a Sanskrit text relating to the metrical science of the Sāma-veda is mentioned as Vijñiti,⁸ a supplement to Sāma-veda. The reading Vijñiti is incorrect and should have been Vijñi. A verse in its beginning reads :

Brāhmaṇāttāṁdīnaśchaiva Piṅgalāchcha mahātmanah, Vidānādukthaśāstrāchcha chhandasām jñānamudhritam.⁹

i. e., the work called Vijini was written subsequent to Tāmdya Brāhmaṇa, Chhandas Śāstra by Piṅgala, Nidāna Śāstra and Uktha Śāstra; the last work is an appendix (Parīśiṣṭa) of *Yajur-veda*¹ having been written by Kātyāyana.

It appears, therefore, that Piṅgala being an earlier writer, Chhando-vijini by him was written earlier than Nidāna Śāstra and Uktha Śāstra.

Ashtādhyāyī by Paṇini and Chhando Vichiti by Piṅgala have eight chapters each; Piṅgala had followed his elder brother. He had an extensive knowledge of metrical science. Yādava Prakāśa quotes the following verses at the end of his commentary :

Chhandojñānamidam bhavādbhagavato lebhe surāṇām guruh,
Tasmādduśchyavanastato asuragururmāṇḍavyanāmā tatah.
Māṇḍavyādapi Saitava (vatasta rishiryāskah), statah Piṅgalam, Tasyedam yaśasā gurorbhūvidhṛitam prāpyāsmadādyaih kramāt. Iti ²

The genealogical order of successive authors is Bhagavāna Bhava or Śiva, Suraguru or Bṛihaspati, Duśchyavana or Indra, Asura-guru or Śukra, Māṇḍavya, Saitava, Yāska and Piṅgala.

Sakhārāma Dīkshita had written a Vṛitti on Piṅgala-Sūtra and his father and uncle had written Vārtika-rāja and Bhāshya-rāja on the same.³ A verse from Vārtika-rāja reads :

Śivagirijā nandi phaṇīndra Bṛihaspati chyavana-śukra Māṇḍavyah,
Saitavah Piṅgala Garuḍapramukhā ādyā jayanti gurucharaṇā.⁴

A genealogical order at the end of another manuscript of Yādava Prakāśa was not written by him as his colophon reads : iti bhagavato Yādavaprakāśasya kṛitau...ityādi¹ and precedes the following verses, mentioning the genealogy, which appear to have been added by the copyist, most probably on the basis of some other old manuscript :

Chhandaśśāstramidam purā trīnayanāllebhe guho nāditah,
Tasmāt prāpa Sanatkumārakamunistasmāt surāṇām guruh.
Tasmāddevapatistatah Phaṇipatih tasmāchcha satpīṅgalah,
Tachchishyairbahubhirmahātmabhiratho mahyām pratishṭhāpitam.²

This genealogical order appears to be incorrect. Here, Phaṇipati or Patañjali preceds Pīṅgala, but Patañjali had not preceded Pīṅgala or immediately succeeded Deva-pati, i.e., Indra. A manuscript on metrical science by Patañjali is available in the Adyar Library. His work on metrical science is available in the first chapter of Nidāna Grantha.

The first four authors mentioned in the list above appear to be very old. Māṇḍavya and Saitava are famous. Pīṅgala refers to them in the aphorism sarvatah Saitavasya.³

Yādava Prakaśa quotes the following verses in the seventh chapter:⁴

Saitavasya pathasthli strī cha pūjitlakṣhaṇā,

Kedāra Bhaṭṭa writes in the second chapter of Vṛitta-Ratnākara :
saitavasyākhileshvapi.

A manuscript on Chhanda Śāstra in verses by Saitava was available with Pt. Svarūpa Dāsa of Amritsar who had referred about the same to late Pandit Bhagavad Datta towards the end of September, 1922. The manuscript could not, however, be obtained by the latter.

The work by Māṇḍavya was also in verse. The name Rāta mentioned in aphorism 7.34 of Piṅgala above appears to be only the half name of Devarāta or some other similar name etc. who was the teacher of Māṇḍavya. Māṇḍavya had enlarged that work. On the same aphorism Bhaṭṭotpala writes in his Bṛihat-saṃhitā Vivṛiti :

Ihāsmiṃ chhando lakṣaṇe prathamako dandakāśchandaṅvriṣṭiprayātasānjyah saptaviṃśatyakṣarapādo bhavati Piṅgalādīnāmārchāṇam matena rāja (rāta) māṇḍavyau varjayitvā. Tayo astu mate eṣa suvarṇākhyah. Tathā cha tāvūchatuh :

Tathā cha pāṭhāntaram :

Arṇo arṇavah plavaśchaiva jīmūto atha Balāhakah,
Samudraścha bhujaṅgaścha saptaite dandakāh smṛitāh.¹

As stated above Piṅgala, the younger brother of Pāṇini, had arranged in verse from Śikṣhā aphorisms of Pāṇini. Piṅgala was well known to Śabara, Patañjali and Pāṇini etc.

Piṅgala refers to Yāska in the aphorism Uro-Bṛihatīti Yāskasya i. e. Yāska calls Nyamku Sārīṇi as Uro-Bṛihiti.²

If Yāska, the author of Nirukta is also the author of the Chhandas Śāstra, he had either preceded Piṅgala or was his contemporary. Piṅgala being the younger brother and contemporary of Pāṇini, was also a contemporary of Yāska.

Vyāḍi

Āchārya Vyāḍi was the maternal uncle of Pāṇini. He had a long life and had written on the system of medicine. His work called Samgraha as stated in the Mahā-bhāshya had one lakh verses :

Śobhanā khalu Dākshāyaṇasya saṁgrahasya kritih,
Śobhanā khalu Dākshāyaṇena saṁgrahasya kṛitih.¹

Vyāḍi was also known as Dākshāyaṇa or Dākshī.² Pāṇini, according to Mahābhāshya, had belonged to the same family as Dākshāyaṇa, whose work was considered to be auspicious. Kaiyaṭa refers to Samgraha as of one lakh verses.

Mahābhāshya has another reference for Vyāḍi :

Dravyābhidhānam Vyāḍih. Dravyābhidhānam Vyāḍirāchāryo nyāyyam manyate.³

Rājaśekhara in his Kāvya Mīmāṃsā, as earlier stated, writes :

Śrūyate cha Pāṭaliputre śāstrakāraparīkshā—

Atropavarshavarshāviha Pāṇini-piṅgalāviha Vyāḍih.

Vararuchi Patañjali iha Parīkshitāh khyātimupajagmuh.⁴

Vararuchi mentioned here is same as Kātyāyana and was elder to Patañjali. Vyāḍi even though younger to Kātyāyana was more close to Pāṇini and Piṅgala and being a near relation is referred to by Pāṇini, as : Krauḍi. Laḍi. Vyāḍi. Āpīśali.⁵ Vyāḍi.⁶

Pāṇini also writes his gotra name as Dākshāyaṇa¹ and refers to his work Samgraha as : Pada, Krama. Samghāta, Vṛitti, Samgraha.²

Most probably Vyāḍi and Vindhyaśāstri, the famous author on Sāṃkhya, were one and the same person. In case of such a possibility, he was not a Buddhist.³

Vyāḍi had written an exhaustive lexicon, which is not available at present; but references to it are available in other lexicons. Puṇyārāja in his commentary on Vākyapadīya by Bhartṛihari quotes three verses of Samgraha by Vyāḍi.⁴ Dākshāyaṇa Vyāḍi, a close relation, of Pāṇini, as stated above, was a contemporary of Śaunaka and other sages. Śaunaka in his Prātiśākhya refers to Vyāli, as : Vyāliśākhyagārgyah.⁵ Vyāḍi also quotes Śaunaka :

Udāttādividhānam tachchhaunakoktam bhavadiha.⁶

Another Vyāḍi who lived much later had nothing to do with this famous Vyāḍi.

Kautsa

Kautsa appears to be a famous name. Authors of this name are common in early literature. One such rishi of sūkta, Kadā vaso,⁷ of Rig-veda, is mentioned in Bṛihad-devatā, as :

Kautsah kadā vaso sūktam durmitro nāma nāmatah, sumitraśchaiva nāma syād guṇārthamitaratpadam.⁸

Raghu-vaṁśa. He was a disciple of Varatantu.¹ On completing his studies, desiring to make offer to his teacher, he approached the king who had donated all his treasury, while performing the Viśvajit Yajña :

Tamadhvare viśvajiti kṣitīśam niḥśeshaviśrāṇitakośhajātam, upāttavidyo gurudakṣiṇārthi kautsah prapade Varatantuśiṣyah.²

Another sage having a similar name is referred to in the Nirukta, as : Anarthakam bhavatīti Kautsah.³

Patañjali also refers to an author of a similar name in his Mahā-bhāṣya, as ; Upasēdivān Kautsah Pāṇinim.⁴ Kautsa referred to by a Yāska in his Nirukta was a contemporary of Pāṇini.

The sages mentioned above were all contemporaries of each other. They had succeeded the famous āchāryas of the Mahā-bhārata period mentioned earlier.

Śaunaka, author of Prātiśākhya and Bṛihad - devatā is the same person referred to by Pāṇini, as, Śaunakādibhyaśchhandasi.⁵ Śaunaka had expounded the Śaunaka recension of Atharva-veda.

The date of all these sages who had expounded the various recensions is near about the Mahā-bhārata period or a generation or two earlier. Śaunaka and others, who had compiled portions of the Aitareya Āranyaka, belong to the third or fourth generation after the Mahā-bhārata war.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

THEIR COMMENTATORS

A large number of commentaries on upanishadas are available ; but the commentators of the Upanishadas had not written their bhāshyas on complete portions of āraṇyakas, even though the upanishadas formed a portion of the āraṇyakas; The commentators on the āraṇyakas, whose commentaries are available, are very few.

A. Aitareya Āraṇyaka

1. Shaḍguru-śishya (Saṁvat 1200-1250)

Shaḍguru-śishya, a famous commentator of Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa, had also written his commentary called, Mokshapradā, on the Aitareya Āraṇyaka. Manuscripts of his commentary are, at present, available in the libraries at Trivendrum and Madras.

2. Sāyaṇa (Saṁvat 1372-1444)

A commentary by Sāyaṇa, on the Aitareya Āraṇyaka, has already been published. The style is similar to other commentaries by Sāyaṇa.

3. Govinda Svāmī

Govinda Svāmī had written his commentary on the Aitareya Āraṇyaka, as well as the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.¹

B. Bṛihad Āraṇyaka (Mādhyandina)

1. Bharṭṛi Prapañcha

Bharṭṛi Prapancha had preceded Śaṅkara. His commentary is referred to by Śaṅkara who is quoted in the commentaries on the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka by Ānanda Giri and Ānanda Jñāna. References from his commentary, without acknowledging their authorship, are quoted by Śaṅkara in his commentary on Bṛihad Āraṇyaka.

Śaṅkara in the beginning of his commentary refers to it as a concise vṛtti on this āraṇyaka, as :

Tasyā iyamalpagranthā vṛttirārabhyate.¹

Ānanda Giri refers to the commentary by Bharṭṛi-prapancha as exhaustive and that of Śaṅkara in comparison as concise but treating the subject with meaningful details. He writes :

Tasyā iti. Bharṭṛiprapanchabhāṣāyādviśeshāntaramāha. Alpagantheti.²

A manuscript of this commentary, complete or incomplete is so far, not available. However, Hiriyānā has collected and published all references to him.³

2. Dviveda Gaṅga

Dviveda Gaṅga had written, Mukhyārtha-Prakāśikā, a commentary on this āraṇyaka. Its summary is added to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa edited by Weber. A complete manuscript of this commentary is available at Hoshiarpur.⁴ Justifying the name of the commentary, it comments only on the main padas and not the minor ones.

The date of Dviveda Gaṅga is not possible to ascertain in the absence of relevant material.

C. Bṛihad Āraṇyaka (Kāṇva)

Bṛihad Āraṇyaka (Kāṇva) appears to be a more famous āraṇyaka and many important commentaries by famous commentators on it are available. The commentators and the commentaries available are as follows :—

1. Siddhānta Dīpikā.
2. Śaṁkara Bhāshya.
3. Commentary by Ānanda Tīrtha on the bhāshya by Śaṁkara.
4. Commentary by Ānanda Tīrtha.
5. Para-brahma-Prakāśikā commentary by Raghūttama.
6. Commentary by Vyāsa Tīrtha.
7. Dīpikā.
8. Dīpika by Gaṅgādhara or Gaṅgādharendra.
9. Mitāksharā commentary by Nityānanda.
10. Laghu-vṛitti by Mathurānātha.
11. Commentary by Rangarāmānuja.
12. Commentary by Sāyaṇa.
13. Bṛihad-āraṇyakopanishat-khaṇḍārtha by Rāghavendra.
14. Bṛihad-āraṇyakopanishdārtha-saṁgraha by Rāghavendra.
15. Bṛihad-āraṇyaka-vishaya-nirṇaya.
16. Bṛihad-āraṇyaka-viveka.
17. Commentary by Vijñānabhikshu.
18. Dīpikā by Nārāyaṇa.

Besides the bhāshyas and commentaries, following vartikas were also written on it :

- 1 Vārttika form of Śaṁkara-bhāshya by Sureśvara.
- 2 Śāstra-Prakāśikā by Ānandatīrtha.
- 3 Nyāya-kalpalatikā by Ānanda Pūrṇa.
- 4 Bṛihad-āraṇyaka-vārttika-sāra.

If efforts are made a few more bhāshyas could be traced.

Āchārya Śaṁkara

Āchārya Śaṁkara is the best and the famous commentator on this āraṇyaka. The age of Śaṁkara is, so far, a controversial issue. Tailanga considers his age to be either fifth or sixth century. T. S. Narayana Sastri in his Age of Śaṁkara mentions his date as fifth century before Vikrama, i.e., about 2500 years earlier. Svāmī Dayānanda Sarasvatī in the eleventh chapter of Satyārtha Prakāśa writes that Ādi Śaṅkarāchārya, author of Bhāṣya Trayī had existed about 2200 years earlier. This date is well known to Indian authors. European and some of the Indian scholars of the present day, place Śaṅkara towards the end of eighth or the beginning of the ninth century. The following material is helpful to determine the date of Śaṅkara.

Date of Śaṅkara

1. Itsing (651-52 A.D.),¹ the Chinese traveller, who visited India, writes, that “this was followed by the works of Bharṭṛi Hari..... This scholar was famous all over the country and his special qualities were well known in all the eight directions..... He had died forty years earlier.” Kumārila Bhaṭṭa in his Tantra-vārtika quotes a verse from Vākyapadīya by Bharṭṛi Hari as : tathā choktam-tatvābodbhah śabdānām nāsti vyākaraṇādṛite.²

This verse is from Vākyapadīya. Kumārila Bhaṭṭa had lived therefore, posterior to the visit of Itsing. He may be assigned a date about 680 A.D.

2. Viśvarūpa, Sureśvara and Maṇḍana are the names of one and the same author, as accepted by a majority of scholars. Viśvarūpa quotes a verse from Kumārila Bhaṭṭa in his commentary called Bāla-kṛidā :

Tathā hi—Śākhānām viprakīrṇatvāt puruṣhānām pramādatah.
Nānaprakaraṇasthatvāt smṛitimūlam na grihyate.³

This verse is available in Tantra-Vārtika.⁴ Viśvarūpa also quotes another verse from *Śloka-vārtika*⁵ of Kumārila, as :

1 pp. 273-275, Itsing ki Bhārata Yātra, translated by Sant Ram. Prayag, 1925

Tathā chāha—Sarvasyaiva hi śāstrasya karmaṇo vāpi kasyachita.
Yāvat prayojanam noktam tāvat tatkena grihyate.¹

3. Maṇḍana, known also as Sureśvara, was a disciple of Śaṅkara. Kumārila Bhaṭṭa being quoted by a disciple of Śaṅkara implies that both Śaṅkara and Kumārila were of the same period. This fact is referred to in Śaṅkara-vijaya. If Kumārila has to be given a date about 680 A. D., as stated above, the period of Śaṅkara is also about the end of seventh century.

4. Puṇyā Rāja in his commentary on Vākya - padīya mentions² Vasurāta, Bhartri Hari and Śaśāṅka or Chandra gomi in the following verses;

Mūlabhūtamavāpyātha parvatādāgamam svayam,
Āchāryavasurātena nyāyamārgānvichintya sah. 54.
Praṇīto vidhivachchāyam mama vyākaraṇāgamah, mayāpi gurunirdiṣṭādbhāshyānnyāyāviluptaye. 55.
Kāṇḍatrayakrameṇāyam nibandha parikīrtitah. 56.
Śaśāṅkaśishyātsrutvaitadvākyakāṇḍa samāsatah. 59.

Āchārya Chandragomi had propagated the use of Mahā - bhāshya during the reign of Abhimanyu I of Kashmir as referred to in Rājatarāṅgiṇī, as :

Chandrāchāryādibhirlabdhādeśam tasmāttadāgamam, pravartitam Mahābhāshyam Chandravvyākaraṇam kṛitam.³

According to Stein. who edited Rāja Taramṅgiṇī, the date of Abhimanyun I is fourth or fifth century. Bhartri Hari could be assigned, therefore, a date not later than sixth century and the statement as such of Itsing is incorrect. Unless the statement of Itsing is corroborated from other sources, the date of Śaṅkara could not be later than sixth century.

Prior to Śaṅkara, many āchāryas had written their bhāshyas on the Upanishadas, as well as on the Vedānta-sūtras. The names of all these authors are lost and an extensive search of the lost literature is a desideratum.

D. Taittirīya Āraṇyaka

1. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara 2. Sāyaṇa

Both Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara and Sāyaṇa had written their bhāshyas on Taittirīya Āraṇyaka. These bhāshyas have already been published.

3. Varadarāja.

Varadarāja, who had written his bhāshya on Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, is mentioned in the list by Aufrecht, based on the manuscripts available in the south. Varadarāja appears to be from south. His father was Ananta Nārāyaṇa who had written his vṛitti or bhāshya on many sūtras related to Sāma-veda. A manuscript of his bhāshya on the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka is, so far, not available.

Possible, Bhava-svāmī might also have written his bhāshya on this āraṇyaka.

E. Maitrāyaṇīya Āraṇyaka.

Rāma Tīrtha

Rāma Tīrtha had written his Dīpikā on Maitrāyaṇīya Āraṇyaka which has already been published. Further details about Rāma Tīrtha are not available.

F. Aufrecht refers to more bhāshyas on this āraṇyaka or upanishad, as :

1. Bhāshya by Śaṅkarāchārya.
2. Dīpikā by Nārāyaṇa.
3. Dīpikā by Prakāśātman.
4. Maitreyopanishadāloka by Vijnāna-bhikshu.

G. Talavakāra Āraṇyaka.

Bhavatrāta

Bhavatrāta, who wrote his commentary on Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa, also had written his bhāshya on Taittirīya Āraṇyaka and Jāimīnīya Śrauta sūtra. Manuscripts of the same are available at Hoshiarpur which, however, do not throw any light on his date.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

MEANING OF THE VEDA

The āraṇyakas, formulated, discussed, and compiled in the forests and explaining the rahasya or secret meaning of the Veda, are equally helpful in understanding the Vedas as the brāhmaṇas. All the āraṇyakas have to be accepted as a commentary on the Vedas. Their language is simple, lucid and comprehensible. One of these āraṇyakas, the Jaiminiya Āraṇyaka, as compared to the other āraṇyakas, more clearly explains the hymns. A comprehensible explanation in this āraṇyaka of a few hymns of the Rig-veda is as follows :

Tadyathā ha vai suvarṇe hiraṇyamagnau prāsyamānam kalyāṇataram kalyāṇataram bhavati evameva kalyāṇatareṇa kalyāṇatareṇātmanā sambhavati ya evam veda. 6. Tadetadṛichābhyanūchyate.¹

2 पतङ्गमक्तमसुरस्य मायया हृदा पश्यन्ति मनसा विपश्चितः । समुद्रे अन्तः कवयो विचक्षते मरीचीनां पदमिच्छन्ति वेधस इति ॥ 10. 177.1. RV

Patamgamaktamiti. Prāṇo vai patamgah. Patanniva hyeshvamngeshviti rathamudikshate. Patamga ityāchakshate.¹

Asurasya māyayeti. Mano vā asuram. Taddhyasushu ramate. Tasyaiva māyayāktah.²

Hṛidā paśyanti manasā vipaśchita iti. Hṛidaiva hyete paśyanti yanmanasā vipaśchitah.³

Samudra antah kavayo vichakshata iti. Purusho vai samudra evam vida u kavayah. Taimām purushe antarvāch am vichakshate.⁴

Marīchinām padamichchhanti vedhasa iti. Marīchya iva vā etā devatā yadagnirvāyurādityaśchandramāh.⁵

Na ha vā etāsām devatānām padamasti. Padeno ha vai punarmṛityuranveti.⁶

The āraṇyaka explains that the Almighty God is manifest to him who is an extremely pure and untarnished soul, like gold assuming purity being put into fire. The prāṇa is like patamga and the mind is compared to an asura. It is enwrapped in its māyā or supernatural power, and is known to the learned through their mind and heart. Purusha is compared to an ocean. The learned who are compared to a kavi infuse this secret into the heart of a purusha. Agni, Vāyu, Āditya and Chandramā are possessed of super-natural powers like the Marīchis. These devatas have no padas, and on account of this fact they do not attain death again and again.

The next hymn of the Rig-veda reads :

Patamgo vācham manasā bibharti tām gandharvo avadadgarbhe antah.

Tām dyotamānām svaryam manīṣhāmṛitasya pade kavayo ni pānti.

315

Its explanation, as given in the āranyaka, is as follows :

Patamgo vāchām manasā bibhartīti. Prāṇo vai patamgah. Sa imām vācham manasā bibharti.¹

Tām gandharvo avadad garbhe antariti. Prāṇo vai gandharvah purusha u garbhah. Sa imām purushe antavācham vadati.²

Tām dyotamānām svaryammanishāmiti. Svaryā hyeshā manishā yad vāk.³

Ṛitasya pade kavayo nipatāntīti. Mano vā ṛitamevam vida u kavayah. Om ityetad evāksharam amṛitam. Tena yadṛicham mimāṁsānte yad yajur yatsāma tadenām nipānti.⁴

The āranyaka in its explanation of this hymn of the Rig-veda states that prāṇa is patamga. The prāṇa holds the speech in the heart. Prāṇa is also compared to gandharva. Purusha itself is the garbha or aṇḍa or womb. The prāṇas speak that speech inside the purusha. Speech is also equated with svaryā manishā. Mind itself is ṛita or truth. He who understands this rahasya is the only learned people. The only ṛita letter is Om. When the hymns of Rig-veda, Yajur-veda and Sāma-veda are explained with the meaning of Om, the eternal speech is preserved for ever.

Another hymn of the Rig-veda reads :

Apasyam gopāmanipadyamānamā cha parā cha pathibhiścharantam. Sa sadhṛichih sa vishūchirvasāna ā varivarti bhuvaneshvantah.⁵

The āranyaka explains it as :

Apasyam gopāmanipadyamānamiti. Prāṇo vai gopāh. Sa hidam sarva-manipadyamāno gopāyati.⁶

- 6 अपश्यं गोपामनिपद्यमानमिति । प्राणो वै गोपाः । स ह्रीदं सर्वमनिपद्यमानो गोपायति ॥ 7.37.2, JUB

Ā cha parā cha pathibhiścharantamiti. Tadye cha ha vā ime prāṇa amī cha raśmaya etairha vā esha etadā cha parā cha pathibhiścharati.¹

Sa sadhṛichih sa vishūchirvasāna iti sadhṛichīsha hyesha etadvishūchīsha prajā vaste.²

Ā varivarti bhuvaneshvantariti. Esha hyevaishu bhuvaneshvanta-ravarivarti.³

i. e., the prāṇas are here equated with gopa. These are the prāṇas which are the rays or raśmis. It follows the path regulated by these. It helps the prajā to settle either forward or retrograde. It is omnipresent in the three lokas.

The explanations of the Vedas in the other āraṇyakas is not as detailed as in the examples given above from the Jaminiya Āraṇyaka. Only the meaning relating to the Supreme spirit or relating to the soul is expressed in the āraṇyakas. At times, if relevant, the meaning of the hymns related to the god, spirits, planets or supernatural agencies is also detailed in the available āraṇyakas.

The help rendered by the āraṇyakas in understanding the meaning of the Vedas is mentioned, in short. Being very close to the upanishadas their meaning is better understood on their combined study.
